Environment & Society Portal

Multimedia Library Collection: Environment and History (journal)

"Australia Unlimited? Environmental Debate in the Age of Catastrophe, 1910–1939"

Frost, Warwick

Frost, Warwick. "Australia Unlimited? Environmental Debate in the Age of Catastrophe, 1910–1939." Environment and History 10, no. 3 (Aug., 2004): 285–303. doi:10.3197/0967340041794295 . Between the First and Second World Wars, Australia was under significant social, political and economic pressures. It has been generally argued that these problems stifled environmental debate, encouraging governments to look to large-scale development schemes for solutions. In turn, the few critics of these schemes were ruthlessly attacked as not having the national interest at heart. This article contests this interpretation of the period. It argues that there was an environmental debate, with a wide range of interests pushing for conservation, the development of National Parks and limits on these development schemes. All rights reserved. © 2004 The White Horse Press

Download:
PDF: https://www.environmentandsociety.org/sites/default/files/key_docs/frost-10-3.pdf

Related links:

- Environment and History at The White Horse Press
  http://www.erica.demon.co.uk/EH.html

Websites linked in this text:

- http://dx.doi.org/10.3197/0967340041794295

Environment and History (journal) Collection, Multimedia Library, Environment & Society Portal
"Australia Unlimited? Environmental Debate in the Age of Catastrophe, 1910–1939"
Source URL: http://www.environmentandsociety.org/node/3203
Print date: 16 November 2026 18:14:27