

Multimedia Library Collection: Books & Profiles

Converging Stories: Race, Ecology, and Environmental Justice in American Literature

Myers, Jeffrey

All rights reserved. © 2005 University of Georgia Press

The copyright holder reserves, or holds for their own use, all the rights provided by copyright law, such as distribution, performance, and creation of derivative works.

Myers, Jeffrey. Converging Stories: Race, Ecology, and Environmental Justice in American Literature. Athens: University of Georgia Press, 2005.

In American literature, our discourse on the themes of race and ecology is too narrowly focused on the twentieth century and does not adequately take into account how these themes are interrelated, argues Jeffrey Myers. His new study broadens the field by looking at writings from the nineteenth century. This was an era, Myers reminds us, of renewed violence and oppression against people of color and of unprecedented environmental destruction on a continental scale. Myers focuses particularly on works that engage the notion that white racism and alienation from nature sprang from a common source. [...] By looking at works by Native Americans, African Americans, European Americans, and others, and by considering forms of literature beyond the traditional nature essay, Myers expands our conceptions of environmental writing and environmental justice. — University of Georgia Press website .

Related links:

- H-Environment, H-Net Reviews, reviewed by Elizabeth D. Blum
<http://www.h-net.org/reviews/showrev.php>
- University of Georgia Press site featuring this book
http://www.ugapress.org/index.php/books/converging_stories/

Websites linked in this text:

- http://www.ugapress.org/index.php/books/converging_stories/