Today, sustainable development is generally accepted as a guiding principle. The present relation societies have with the natural environment is considered as being not-sustainable. However this presupposes some idea about the quality of the environment and of activities affecting the environment and, as a consequence, of the quality of life. In this article I defend the proposition that the limited progress made with respect to the environment—despite all the good intentions—could be due to a potential conflict between “quality” and sustainable development. In other words: our interpretation of the concept of “quality” is not compatible with the aims of sustainability. Some consequences for research and policy of accepting this proposition are discussed.
