> In 2006, Vancouver’s Stanley Park was struck by an extreme windstorm, which blew down more than ten thousand trees. This was just one of a series of windstorms to strike the park in the twentieth century, including major storms in 1901, 1934, and 1962. The nature of windstorms in British Columbia’s Lower Mainland is incredibly complicated and the research of Wolf Read, a 2009 graduate student in the Department of Forest Sciences at UBC, will help us try to make sense of it. — Abstract from NiCHE website

Also, Professor Joanna Dean from Carleton University’s Department of History talks about the 2009 Canadian History & Environment Summer School in Ottawa.
