> Traditionally the word baud in the Thai language refers to a Buddhist ceremony that men undergo to signify their entrance into monkhood. Now the adapted ceremony baud bah (which means "ordained forest") is used to raise environmental awareness and teach all Thai about the value of forests by ordaining trees. In the baud bah monks pray and wrap saffron robes around the trunks of trees to declare their sacredness. Baud bah has worked well because most Thais deeply respect the saffron robe. In short, nobody would dare cut the sanctified trees out of respect for the saffron robe and its inextricable link with Buddhism.
