> We humans destroy, and then we conveniently forget. We have forgotten that white beluga whales once swam free in Long Island Sound. We have forgotten that the great California condor once glided on the thermals over this great state. We have forgotten so much as we have steadily adapted to diminishment. In the not-too-distant future, will we also forget the seals of the wild and the places that were their homes? Will the seals exist only in places like Sea World and on the sterile pages of children's books?
