> The Seed Box is an international environmental humanities collaboratory headquartered at Linköping University (LiU) in Sweden. Supported with generous funding from Mistra, the Swedish Foundation for Strategic Environmental Research, and Formas, the Swedish Research Council for Environment, Agricultural Sciences, and Spatial Planning, the Seed Box takes as its mission the development of a national center for environmental humanities research across the nature-culture divide, and creative activity related to solving today's pressing environmental problems. We cultivate especially feminist- and environmental justice-oriented more-than-human humanities. (Text from The Seed Box)

The Seed Box entails cross-university and cross-faculty collaborations, capacity building activities, and a lively research project portfolio . Researchers interested in collaborating can apply for the annual Seed Funding grant .
