Ecoartspace is a nonprofit platform providing opportunities for artists who address the human/nature relationship in the visual arts. Since 1999 they have collaborated with over 150 organizations to produce more than 40 exhibitions, 100 programs, working with 500 + artists in 15 states nationally and 8 countries internationally. Currently they are developing a media archive of video interviews with artists and a series of ACTION Guides of replicable social practice public art projects for educators. Ecoartspace is a platform for disseminating news and information about the interconnection between art and ecology in the United States. The posts pertain to member initiatives, lectures, workshops, exhibitions, Curator/Artist-in-Residence opportunities, and art projects. The website also features Ecoart links and a video archive . The Ecoartspace Action Guides section is a collection of ten art and ecology learning guides made by different artists. Each guide aims to present replicable social art projects for educators. The blog is administrated by Patricia Watts , founder and west coast/midwest curator, and Amy Lipton , east coast curator and director of the Ecoartspace NYC.
