

Multimedia Library Collection: Periodicals

"Multiple Temporalities and the Nonhuman Other"

Fitz-Henry, Erin

Fitz-Henry, Erin. "Multiple Temporalities and the Nonhuman Other." Environmental Humanities 9, no. 1 (2017): 1-17. doi:10.1215/22011919-3829109.

In this article I pose a series of questions about the relationships between the temporal rhythms of late capitalism and the flourishing of those relational "onto-epistemologies" so celebrated by recent theorists of the ontological turn. Bringing together recent research in political and environmental anthropology influenced by the ontological turn and the temporal insights of Michel Serres, one of the most neglected forefathers of posthumanism in science and technology studies, I explore some of the political-economic transformations that are currently impeding recognition of these ontological multiplicities. By more explicitly theorizing the temporalities of these transformations as embodied in key conservationist and educational institutions, my argument is that we can simultaneously deepen our understanding of "worlds-otherwise" and work toward clarifying the institutional conditions that so strongly mitigate against the flourishing of those worlds. (Text from author's abstract)

© Erin Fitz-Henry 2017. Environmental Humanities is available online only and is published under a Creative Commons license (CC BY-NC-ND 3.0).

Download:

PDF:

https://www.environmentandsociety.org/sites/default/files/key_docs/environmental_humanities-2017-fitz-henry-1-17.pdf

Related links:

- Environmental Humanities website
<http://environmentalhumanities.org/>
- Environmental Humanities 9, no. 1
<http://environmentalhumanities.dukejournals.org/content/9/1.toc>

