Environment & Society Portal

Multimedia Library Collection: Periodicals

"Memory"

Bristow, Tom

Bristow, Tom. "Memory." Environmental Humanities 5, no. 1 (2014): 307–11. doi:10.1215/22011919-3615568.

I turn to the human concept of memory and to our public repositories of human and non-human memories to invoke the idea of the archive, by which I mean the total sum of our libraries, museums, collecting institutions and online databases. These instruments are viewed as sites of power at once structuring our thoughts on a subject, and censoring and indexing an approach to a topic. I also speak of history and memory, both individual and collective, and how our collecting institutions are uniquely located to bridge these two forms. (Text from author)

© Tom Bristow 2014. Environmental Humanities is available online only and is published under a Creative Commons license (CC BY-NC-ND 3.0).

Download:
PDF:
https://www.environmentandsociety.org/sites/default/files/key_docs/environmental_humanities-2014-bristow-307-11.pdf

Related links:

- Environmental Humanities website
  http://environmentalhumanities.org/
- Environmental Humanities Vol. 5
  http://environmentalhumanities.dukejournals.org/content/5/1.toc

Periodicals Collection, Multimedia Library, Environment & Society Portal
"Memory"
Source URL: http://www.environmentandsociety.org/node/8091
Print date: 06 November 2026 21:34:51