FOREST VOICE

An Urgent Appeal to Citizens and Congress

Stop the Destruction of the Last Remnants of the Public's Native Forests

Americans are concerned with the destruction of tropical rainforests, yet fail to take a hard look at what the timber industry is doing to our national forests.

This issue of Forest Voice features photographs of deforested U.S. federal lands and argues that log exporting is both economically and environmentally foolish. It outlines appeals citizens can make to their government representatives to save national native forests.

> America can not tolerate the loss of one more acre of natural, virgin, old-growth forest. What little remains must be guarded and protected. By diverting only one quarter of our raw-material exports, all of our remaining native forests can be saved.
