

Multimedia Library Collection: Periodicals

“Laws, Parks, Reserves, and Local Peoples: A Brief Historical Analysis of Conservation Legislation in Mozambique”

Matusse, Anselmo

Matusse, Anselmo. “Laws, Parks, Reserves, and Local Peoples: A Brief Historical Analysis of Conservation Legislation in Mozambique.” Conservation & Society 17, no. 1 (2019): 15–25.

https://doi.org/10.4103/cs.cs_17_40 .

This article uses a short historical study of Mozambican conservation legislation to show how local knowledges have been systematically disenfranchised from legislation since colonial period through a discourse analysis of conservation legal documents including constitutions. This study shows that the country has favoured modernity as a framework to deal with nature conservation which clashed in complex ways with local modes of living. Hence the article uses James Scott’s concept of “high-modern ideology” to trace continuities and changes in local knowledges and people marginalisation because of conservation legislation since the colonial period to the present. The article shows that, more market-based approaches to nature conservation are currently being promoted by the state and international donors and organisations; this in turn could lead to local communities treating nature as a commodity. (Text from author’s abstract)

© Anselmo Matusse 2019. Conservation & Society is available online only and is published under a Creative Commons license (CC BY 2.5).

Download:

PDF: https://www.environmentandsociety.org/sites/default/files/key_docs/conservatsoc17115-1937232_052252.pdf

Related links:

- Conservation & Society website
<http://www.conservationandsociety.org/>
- Conservation & Society 17, no. 1

<http://www.conservationandsociety.org/showBackIssue.asp>

Websites linked in this text:

- https://doi.org/10.4103/cs.cs_17_40