In an era of transatlantic migration, Germans were fascinated by the myth of the frontier. Yet, for many, they were most likely to encounter frontier landscapes of new settlement and the taming of nature not in far-flung landscapes abroad, but on the edges of Germany’s many growing cities. Germany’s Urban Frontiers: Nature and History on the Edge of the Nineteenth-Century City (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2020) is the first book to examine how nineteenth-century notions of progress, community, and nature shaped the changing spaces of German urban peripheries as the walls and boundaries that had so long defined central European cities disappeared. Through a series of local case studies including Leipzig, Oldenburg, and Berlin, Kristin Poling reveals how Germans on the edge of the city confronted not only questions of planning and control, but also their own histories and futures as a community.

(Source: New Books Network)

In this episode of New Books in German Studies, Steven Seegel interviews Kristin Poling, author of Germany’s Urban Frontiers: Nature and History on the Edge of the Nineteenth-Century City.

© 2021 New Books Network

Related links:

- New Books Network
  https://newbooksnetwork.com/
- Sealing the Land: Recognizing Urban Developments in Past and Present Göttingen
Interview with Kristin Poling, author of Germany’s Urban Frontiers: Nature and History on the Edge of the Nineteenth-Century City

Source URL: http://www.environmentandsociety.org/node/9335

Print date: 17 December 2021 11:51:56

Websites linked in this text:

- https://newbooksnetwork.com/germanys-urban-frontiers