

Multimedia Library Collection: Periodicals

“What’s in a Name? More-Than-Human Approaches and Environmental History”

O’Gorman, Emily

O’Gorman, Emily. “What’s in a Name? More-Than-Human Approaches and Environmental History.” Global Environment: A Journal of Transdisciplinary History 16, no. 2 (2023): 401–9.

Providing a name like more-than-human histories for a general set of approaches invites scholars from within and beyond environmental history into the conversations generated by these ideas. Within environmental history it can help to develop ideas, sustain dialogue and promote new approaches. ... Being explicit about how we undertake more-than-human histories can help us to be more attentive to how we conduct our research. It can also promote discussion within and beyond environmental history around both shared and divergent approaches and interests. (From the article)

A collaboration between the International Consortium of Environmental History Organizations and The White Horse Press, “Notes from the Icehouse” is a series of reflections published in each issue of Global Environment: A Journal of Transdisciplinary History.

© 2023 The White Horse Press. All rights reserved.

Download:

PDF: https://www.environmentandsociety.org/sites/default/files/key_docs/iceho.pdf

Related links:

- Notes from the Icehouse at ICEHO
<https://www.iceho.org/notes-from-the-icehouse>
- Global Environment
<https://liverpooluniversitypress.co.uk/toc/whpge/current>
- The White Horse Press
<https://www.whpress.co.uk/>

