Dakota People Defiantly Occupy Land

BY WAZITATAWIN, Ph.D.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is trying to exploit a legal loophole in order to, once again, unjustly seize indigenous-held land as the US Government has done by various methods countless times before. The Dakota people need support and solidarity to save what's left of their land from yet still more government theft. Crow Creek Land is not for sale.

Brandon Sazue’s camper sitting in the middle of the prairie presented a lonely but inspiring image as we drove up Wednesday afternoon. Despite the bitter cold and wind, the young Crow Creek tribal chairman was taking a stand against the United States’ theft of any more Dakota lands, telling us, “Crow Creek land is not for sale and it never will be.”

Symbolically placing his camper under a wind data tower, Sazue has committed to remain on this parcel of land as long as it takes to achieve justice. The land is part of the 7,112 acres recently stolen by the US government in what amounts to a 21st century land grab. Because the land is not currently held in trust, on December 4, 2009, the IRS claimed it and auctioned it off as a means to settle what it asserts is a delinquent $3,123,790 tax bill. Though most of the Crow Creek reservation is situated within the poorest county in the US, the land under dispute happens to contain world-class sites for the harnessing of wind power. As the world’s fossil fuels dwindle and alternative energy sources are increasingly sought after, Crow Creek lands have become increasingly attractive to outside interests. Whoever develops the site for wind-energy stands to make a fortune. This connection is not lost on Chairman Sazue.

Anyone who understands the history of the Dakota people since invasion and conquest cannot help but be stunned by this attack on the tribal lands of people who have already suffered so much. After the US Dakota War of 1862, the US federal government and the state of Minnesota initiated polices of genocide and ethnic cleansing against Dakota people in our beloved homeland. White Minnesotans rounded-up and forced dislocations for all people. We challenge any who seek to occupy and split our lands in two, as well as those who have chosen to no longer acquire to the displacement of people due to capitalism, colonization and invasive infrastructure projects.

From the original call: “We are an autonomous, anti-capitalist force that demands free movement and an end to forced dislocations for all people. We challenge with equal force both the systems of control that seek to occupy and split our lands in two, as well as those who have chosen to no longer acquire to the displacement of people due to capitalism, colonization and invasive infrastructure projects.

Dakota People Defiantly Occupy Land

Decolonizing, Destroying Borders and Attacking Infrastructure

What side are you on?

A question that all past revolutionaries have had to ask themselves at critical moments in human history: How do we respond to occupation and conquest? What is our role? How do we act in solidarity with our beloved homeland?

BY SURVIVAL SOLIDARITY

On January 16, Diné, O’odham and Anarchist/Anti-authoritarian (DO®) people answered a call-out from the O’odham Solidarity Against Borders Collective and Phoenix Class War Council to form the DO® Bloc. The bloc, consisting of anarchists and Indigenous people, converged on occupied Akimel O’odham Pi-Pishi land (Phoenix) to take part in what was a larger march against Maricopa County, Sheriff Joe Arpaio. Arpaio is well known for his racist border politics and strict prison regulations. However this time people were confronting his repression on those who take situations into their own hands and defiantly cross the border without permission.

No deportations, relocations or foreclosures

The DO® Bloc’s masks and hoodies were not the only points of contrast between them and other march participants. The DO® block represented the distance in many people’s mouths from endless banal discussions and approaches to the border. It brought the unwillingness to ignore the nightmare of capitalism that socializes the walls that divide us. The DO® bloc consisted of those who chose to no longer acquiesce to the displacement of people due to capitalism, colonization and invasive infrastructure projects.

From the original call: “We are an autonomous, anti-capitalist force that demands free movement and an end to forced dislocations for all people. We challenge with equal force both the systems of control that seek to occupy and split our lands in two, as well as those who have chosen to no longer acquire to the displacement of people due to capitalism, colonization and invasive infrastructure projects.”

When I started on this issue of the Earth First! Journal, I came into the thing thinking what I was doing a year ago, and what insight I have gained. This last year, we have had many blows: we have had loved ones locked behind bars, comrades indicted on trumped-up charges and friends subpoenaed to grand juries. It is really difficult to write about this past year in a positive manner. But I have been inspired by those who, even under the pressure and intimidation of years in jail, refused to cooperate with governmental officials' fishing expeditions; by those who did not get away, but after years of incarceration are getting out anyway; by those who have dedicated their lives fighting for the wild, be it strategic and effective paper-wrenching or well planned monkey-wrenching.

After arriving in Tucson, I started doing some homework; I read past issues of the journal dating back as far as the late 80s, and what was available of the Do or Die publications put out in the late 90s, and early 2000s. After reading those publications, I realized there was something missing in what is published now. Action reports recently have been missing fierce honesty. I want to read candid news that is exciting, not propaganda. Are we so caught up in a cycle of civil disobedience that we can't think past it? (or before it, for that matter; grassroots organizing.) The past indicates that we have the means to be creative in our endeavors. We don't need to be deluged about our actions; they should speak for themselves. I don't think I could put it better than Rod Coronado, when he said, "This resistance is not about remaining true to civil disobedience... it's about preventing the wholesale destruction of our one and only life support system. Our greatest strategic asset is our strategy... we should be whether our actions are effecting the financial bottom-line of the destroyers of Earth."

"Live wild and free" should not just be something that we write in usually letters and books. It should be something we take to logging roads, slaughter houses, real mines, vivisection labs, prisons, detention centers, border walls, and pipelines. Let us remember what we are struggling for and who we are fighting against. Because "Earth First!" should not roll off the tongues of our enemies with ease, they should choke upon it, like a fishbone stuck in their throats.

From struggles in Scotland to Mexico, from Arizona to West Virginia there is resistance to that which is killing us and Earth. So lets live wild and be fierce as fuck. Any Up!

experienced overt harassment by the FBI after the ALF action in 2004. Her lawyers are fighting the subpoena, and there is no indication that they are cooperating with the state. We are currently working on establishing a relationship with two law enforcement agencies to keep our solidarity strong.

Scott and Carrie are being targeted because they are committed radical activists who refuse to be intimidated into cooperating in the repression of dissent, not because they actually had anything to do with the 2004 University of Iowa incident. Despite the empty nature of the grand jury's demands for money, power, and Carrie and Scott need our support—financial, personal, and political—at every step of this process. This is one of countless examples of the ways that the government's claims that grand juries are necessary to uphold the law and create a just society, their true purpose has been to intimidate and recruit and to force people ranging from journalists who refused to identify their sources, to five of the Black Panthers known as the San Francisco 8, to activists involved in the Puerto Rican independence movement to earth-and animal-liberationists. Unlike the "petty" jury, which is used to determine guilt in a trial, a grand jury conscripts witnesses to provide information to government agents who are not screened for bias. The purpose of the grand jury is not to determine guilt or innocence; the purpose is to create an invention for information. The normal rules of evidence do not apply. The prosecutor runs the proceedings and no judge is present. Grand juries are not allowed to be present in the grand jury room and cannot present evidence, but they can have available outside the room to consult with witnesses. The prosecutor and the grand jury members may not re- view what occurred in the grand jury room and witnesses cannot always obtain a transcript of their testimony.

The threats of their broad subpoena powers and secretive nature, grand juries have been described by constitutional scholars as a tool to gather information on political movements and to disrupt those movements by causing fear and mistrust, because those who refuse to answer questions about their First Amendment political activities, financial activities, criminal activities, or immigration status may be indicted. Those called before the grand jury may be compelled to answer any question, even those relating to lawful personal and political activities. That information has been used by the government as a basis to conduct further surveillance and disrupt political dissent.

When used against political movements the grand jury causes fear and mistrust, because those who refuse to answer questions about their First Amendment political activities, financial activities, criminal activities, or immigration status may be indicted. That information has been used by the government as a basis to conduct further surveillance and disrupt political dissent.

As if using a grand jury wasn't bad enough, Cronk pulled a conspiracy trick and tried to use the grand jury laws against those of the AETA. We're concerned about the AETA because the government's claims to the contrary, including claims made by those who refuse to answer questions about their First Amendment political activities, financial activities, criminal activities, or immigration status may be indicted. The legal battles that Carrie and Scott are fighting are some of the most recent instances of the State's obvious repression that the State has used to disrupt, weaken, and destroy movements for justice and liberation. Their struggles are tied to struggles of radicals, activists from, movements and eras, and the outcome of their struggles will affect all of us for however many more years the Empire retains its power. We strengthen our movements when we continue to support those who have been affected by this system. Dear Professor Stone,

Reading the EPI piece “Weather or Not?” I thought you would be interested in Georgia’s “wholesale clearcutting.” And the fake environ-mental organizations by state agen- cies that are fronts for industry.

You are on target about the need to address pollution. Emissions are a distraction to smokestack more deadly issues like species ex- tinction, toxic trash (depleted urani- um, etc.) that (bumpt) the Atlantic) and deforestation. That most holy of Grails, growth, must remain unattainable. Justice.

William O. Douglas’ statement rings true: “The main purpose of the Corporation State is to turn all the riches of the earth into dollars.”

Another major issue avoided— the major issue the impossibility of progress while the $84 trillions in- vestment war of ‘rogen nations.” First, it was communism; now it is ter- rorism—Both strawsmen justifying Mr. Bush’s new one- moneymaker and crowd-controller. Douglas writes, “...The contraction of war has perhaps been the easiest of all issues for the people.” Especially easy when those who make the contractions own the media.

Far from saving earth, their passion is for conquest, profit and destruction. They are consist- ent, clearcutting forests and the genocide of people.

Our mission: wonkswrench the mega-death machine. In every possible way bring all our power to defend the ‘richest of the earth.’

Sincerely,

—Charles Wogin

Dear Earth First! Folk:

I was transferred back to WERDCU way long ago, but am only now out of Da Hole and get- ting back to business. So here’s my Change of Address:

Sorry to be so now. And thank you! I got my September-October issue last night. Now I can feel “kept up” on everything “smile”!

Can’t ask for a better special fa- vor? I think it was in my May-June issue though it might have been March-April. Just an and for Vegas shirts that was so neat I wanted to write to the company. But I wasn’t quick enough, and they made me get it from my magazine before I did it. I’m wunder- fuling if you will look for me and forward their address.

If it sounds like a lot of work, please don’t let me get it! But if you don’t mind, well, the only way I can identify it is by telling you: there was one super-neat shirt that had a picture of a cow saying “How about a feed you, fucker?” I love that!!

If they don’t come in from the cold, you can only state that we will never tire of working to gain the release of you all! Working in unity and solidarity we know that everyone can be brought home where they be longing! We will never cease till that is a reality for all.

We also hope that everyone possible does their very best to come to Philadelphia on May 13 2010 to show their support for the release of the MOVE 9, and all political prisoners! We are start- ing work on this project early be- cause it is truly needed for a massive show of support concerning this issue of political prisoners being denied parole from this system’s prisons long after they should have been released! Only in unity will this system bow to the de- mands of the people! For all who have comrades, loved ones, fam- ily, in these bell holes it is a must that you come out! All those who support the right of “Justice for all,” it is a must that you come out to demonstrate your commit- ment to that information to find out what you can do to help, as there is always something for everyone to do in this revolu- tion! This system has shown that without pressure being applied to form a bond to the will of the people, it will continue to serve the will of the super rich that controls it. For more infor- mation on how people can be of help contact MOVE at: 215-387-4107 or write to The MOVE Or- ganization, PO BOX 19709, Philadelphia, PA 19143. As always (tak cares and stay strong!)

John Africa explained: “war is a concept; peace is real; prison is created; freedom is realized; (human) philosophy, love is the reality.” Long live John Africa!

Ona MOVE! Your Brn into Revolution.

A Frnd of AFRICA.

Dear Snitches for Brains (pt. revolution).

I wrote a controversial letter about snitches, which appeared in the Journal a few issues ago. Since then, I have changed my mind about what I said at the Round River Rondy (RRR) and what I wrote in that letter, and since I地看着 the position, a trusted friend thought I should write another letter.

What to fully expected to catch some shit over my statements (about remaining friends with one of the informants once they were released), did not expect a threat of bodily harm or being “black-balled” by people in my own com- munity as a “security risk,” and “future snitch.” Just to say it again, I do not now nor have I ever had any communication with any of the in- formants. What I said at the RRR was not well thought out, and I shouldn’t have said it, certainly not at a well-attended discussion about prisoner support at the RRR.

My intent was just to jump-start a discussion, and, boy, did I.

Another, I did not anticipa- te was that my letter being print- ed in the EPI would pre- vent our getting support from receiv- ing it (so I have) withheld defen- dants’ names from this letter hoping that this EPI will make past the RPP censors.

After much thought and commu- nication with others, I have decided that being a good friend of one of the non-cooperators means that I cannot be a friend of my for- mer friend (the informant I referred to). For most people who were never friends/lovers/housemates with the informants, and for many who were, this is a no-brainer, but I do not give up my friends easily. This is not charted in our movement and is difficult for all of us, the people in prison most of all, but also for those of us on the outside.

I encourage others to contin- ue to discuss the importance of prisoner support and solidarity in regards to people who cooperate with the govern- ment to do damage to the effec- tive cause. We must achieve our goals of the radical enviro movement.

Solidarity with my good friend is what lead me to my decision.

For the present part of this discussion has been hearing about people who shunned me and la- beled me a “security risk without having the backbone to talk to me first or to even attempt to change my mind before writing me off. As a movement (and not a cult), I think we need to discuss and debate these issues openly.

In this case, I was convinced to change my thinking. My thanks to those who communicated with me directly, supportive and not.

Lastly, if you have not recently, write to the non-cooperative prison- ers, even the ones you don’t know.

I’ll bet Winter is a very dark time to be in prison. Their addresses are in the back of the Journal and on their support websites.

Jim Pong

Hello,

I’m not going to tell you my name, I will tell you that I am a male, 25 years old, and have grown up working full time lending around the timber industry. In particular, Humboldt county. My father has been a com- mercial truck driver for the last 28 years, hauling from every mill in the area that you have a problem with.

My family, like many, rely on this industry as a source of income, a way to live. It’s bred into us. I have got- ten older and accessed these situations that I grew up watching and hearing about (ie- northern f- races). Why does this happen? You fight so hard, yet all in all it doesn’t work. Or if you fight hard enough you sim- ply piss people off. Do you study? I’d like to give you the benefit of the doubt and think you do. Or do you simply waste all your time protesting? If not, you would real- ize that the timber industry has been alive and well for over 100 years. Its what makes the area what it is, everywhere you go.

Now, what really bothers me is this, half of you aren’t even from the area. You decide to move here for great schooling, good. Well somewhere along the line you got sideways and four months down the road you end up sitting in a tree on palo land. How is it that you feel that its ok to trespass onto someone’s property? Just because you live in a communal home and anyone can come in, doesn’t mean that you can go walking and live on any land you want.

I’m not trying to ramble on and on, but sometimes that’s the way it goes. Just remember Sierra Pa- cific, Simpson Redwood’s they’ve been “inheriting” land for 100 years and they’ll be there for another 100. They’re not going anywhere and people like you are re.

Sincerely,

—Timbered
Dear Earth First! Journal,

Knowing your work and your commitment on environmental issues and climate change, I want to be your ally. I attended the People’s World Conference on Climate Change and Mother Earth’s Rights to be held from 20 to 22 April, 2010 in Cochabamba, Bolivia. This conference is called by Bolivian President Evo Morales, as a response to the failure on climate change negotiations in Copenhagen with the following objectives:
1) To analyze the structural and systemic causes that drive climate change and to propose radical measures to ensure the well-being of all humanity in harmony with nature.
2) To discuss and agree on the project of a Universal Declaration of Mother Earth Rights.
3) To agree on proposals for new commitments to the Kyoto Protocol and COP15 Decision under the United Nations Framework for Climate Change that will guide future actions in those countries that are engaged with life during climate change negotiations and in all United Nations scenarios, related to climate debt, climate change, migrants, refugees, emissions reductions, adaptation, technology transfer, financial mechanisms, and shared vision, indigenous peoples.
4) To work on the organization of the Peoples’ World Referendum on Climate Change.
5) To analyze and develop an action plan to advance the establishment of a Climate Justice Tribunal.
6) To define strategies for action and mobilization to defend life from Climate Change and to defend Mother Earth’s Rights. More information can be found on the web site www.carlapoeta.com. Adhesion should be done info@cmcp.org. People in the EEUU interested to participate on this event contact to Carla Esposito, Bolivian Mission to the United Nations, Tel 212-682-8132. Dear Earth First!
I have the wild and wonderful places I have had the privilege to camp at and visit at Earth First! gatherings. From Northern Idaho to wilderness, to old growth on the west coast—to the best camps here in Appalachia. Being involved with EF has enabled me to see and live in some of the most beautiful natural areas in America.

1) The wild and wonderful people I have had the privilege to camp with and visit while organizing with Earth First! I have met and gotten to know some of the most amazing folks who are attracted to the struggle and resistance for the Earth.
2) No national office or leadership works in vain, working to make their issues to work on—and how to organize from afar or near.
3) The consensus based model in EF meetings.
4) Getting to sleep in the canopy of forest on the west and east coast for days at a time.
5) Being affiliated with decades of direct action and resistance for the Earth.
6) Typically getting involved with campaigns years before any of the big stuff enviro organizations. Getting to organize and work on issues before grant driven groups get involved and screw it all up.
7) Founding directly from the opposition that we are the ones they fear and think are the clowns under their beds at night—even when we are presenting a half dozen national organizations are involved.
8) Being part of a movement whose artwork should someday be sustainable to view in museums. Movements are often judged historically by their art—just what has been lost to history. Nukes for decades is stunning in its detail and beauty.
9) All the amazing songs and the history that goes with those songs and the musicians who sing them and keep them along. Especially dancing on the ruins. Ha ha ha ha ha!
10) The intellectual diversity of Earth First!
11) Whole rednecks for wilderness thing.
12) The entire discussion and place in Earth First! that deep ecology carved into its niche.
13) Being affiliated with a movement that boast such historical figures as Dave Foreman, Peg Millet, Daryl Chemney, Judy Bar and Mike Roselle and Paul Watson. All of them are my heroes—flawed humans that they are.
14) The amazing parties.
15) Facing threats of a thousand years in prison having folks who refused to cooperate and said, “fuck you,” to the state when offered a deal to squeal.
16) When you are in West Africa hearing on the news about Earth First! here in Tennessee blocking a nuclear power plant.
17) Having friends in Earth First! that still organize after decades as Earth Firsters despite the negative Nancys who said, “you can’t do that!” says.
18) The amazing friends—I remember when locked down with one other person after an RPR in Colorado my friends showing up and spontaneously locking arms and joining me all the way going, we are going.” Friends who “ante up.”
19) Meeting my beautiful and amazing wife Paloma through my Earth First! organizing. I just wanted to take a moment to thank those in Earth First! who made all of this possible. Dearest Crap-filled Craniums,
Imagine my surprise to find an excerpt from my zine “Exploring Surface Mines” gracing the pages of the EFJ Journal. I’m happy to see it reprinted, it’s important info, you stressed the safety warnings, and I love all you piratical fuckers.

But a couple things annoy me. It’s usually considered proper (mutua respect y’er) to consult an author prior to printing an article or an permission, updates (bear warning), corrections (no bear warning), feedback (funny bear stories), etc. I know I forgot to put an address on the back, but the person who gave it to you knows me. It would have taken two phone calls max to track me down... so I could add a bear warning.

I definitely would not have wanted this placed in the Ned Ludd column. You know perfectly well that I wrote it for Mountain Justice and associated campaigners, who all have a no monkey-wrenching policy. The proper place for this article would have been as a zine review.

As for the statement “I... don’t know where you can get a copy...” what about the small pile I gave you? Or how about copying yours? Maybe scan it to the Journals website? D.I.Y.? Stick out your wrist! SLAP!

—SILLY BILL

P.S. Watch out for bears in the woods around mine sites! If anyone wants an updated version send a request to sillybill980@gmail.com or drag yer butts up to Rock Creek, West Virginia to help out the hard working folks at Climate Ground Zero—call 304-854-1937 for directions.

Dear Mr/Ms,
Your patience is requested as I delicately find words for the special animosity I reserve for your “journal” and the moral superiority oozing from every tree-slaughtered page, issue after issue. I have issues. Issues with you, particularly. And your moral superiority, Patience. I repeat myself when I’m riled up.

Where do you get off, claiming “no compromise” in “defense” of Mother Earth? As if she gives a shit whether or not you have the gumption to pull it off, pull off anything at all.

Don’t you realize the more you do “for her,” the more you fuck it up? The more trees you sit in, the more they want to shake you off.

Don’t you see that the forests, the deserts, the seas, the lakes, the clouds, the prairies, the mountains, they all want a chance to fight for themselves? They don’t need your proselytizing, sandal-wearing asses getting in their way.

Until you learn how to unhook a tree, stay out of the woods. Until you learn how to unhook a hole, stay away from the underground. Until you learn how to take care of yourselves and your own relationships at home, don’t hit the road. Let the fucking road hit you! If you stopped shouting and writing all the time, you’d be able to actually listen to whom you claim to “support.”

Note: The cues (if you even care) have spent a long time building its own defenses against those who try to enter: miners, tourists, park rangers, activists, whoever. What do you think those stalacites above and stalagmites below are for? Drapery, growing ever closer to each other for our aesthetic pleasure? No, shit for brains. Those are teeth. Quit speaking for. Quit speaking all together. Let the Earth feed off her parasites at last.

Rabidly yours,
—BRAINS FOR BRAINS

Letter From the RNC 8

By the RNC 8

Dear friends, families and supporters,

The last time that we wrote, we were only weeks beyond the 2008 Republican National Convention (RNC), and still figuring out how to navigate our case with a sense of collectivity and integrity. Now, more than a year after the fact, we find ourselves in a new timeline. Day to day, we don't feel the intensity of repression that we did in the weeks surrounding the RNC, yet the trial looms somewhere in the distance and we're not really free from it. We return to court on February 2 and may come out of the hearing with a trial date certain. While it's hard to remain upbeat about the prospect, we hope to make the final push toward trial energizing for ourselves and our supporters alike, and we feel certain that a strong show of court solidarity will make a huge difference in the outcome of our case.

"As we look towards what could be the final stage of our own case, we're left to ponder the impact of our work. It is our hope that our supporters also support every person named in this letter, and every target of State repression left unnamed."

The past year has been difficult, both in dealing with our own situation and in watching as the State's attempts to subvert and disrupt anarchist movements gain steam, following well-established patterns of repression against dissident political movements throughout history.

In late 2008 and 2009, Ramsey County, Minnesota, prosecuted more than a dozen felony cases resulting from the RNC. Abusing their unchecked power to slap on charge after unfounded charge as a way of coercing people out of exercising their right to trial, and with the constant threat of terrorism enhancements, prosecutors extracted numerous plea agreements from individuals who came to the RNC protocol outraged at this oppressive system and willing to take a conscientious stand against it.

In late 2008, well-known and controversial radical activist Brandon Darby was cuffed as a paid FBI informant. This happened as a result of his entrapment of Brad Crowder and David McKay, two young men who traveled from Texas to Minnesota for the RNC protests. Though Brad and David both eventually plead guilty to federal charges of making and possessing Molotov cocktails, facts surrounding the case and testimony given during McKay's initial trial make it clear that Darby went out of his way to create the unlikely scenario in which the crimes were committed. Darby, who faked an expression of conscience will go unpunished, has already robbed two people of their freedom, but the extent of his cooperation and the damage it has done to our community remains to be seen.

In April of 2009, Indiana residents, Tiga Wertz and Hugh Farrell, were arrested and charged with racketeering as a result of their work organizing against Interstate-69 (I-69), the US segment of the NAFTA Superhighway. I-69 is a &quot;small scale&quot; environmental destruction and facilitates &quot;the movement of goods and capital at the expense of the continent's poor and working people. Tiga and Hugh are still awaiting trial, which will likely not start before 2011.

Late this fall, two friends and comrades of ours in Minneapolis, Carrie Felton and Scott DeMuth, were subpoenaed to a federal grand jury in Davenport, Iowa, which is investigating a 2004 Animal Liberation Front action at the University of Iowa. Scott and Carrie were teenagers in Minnesota at the time of the raid claimed by the Animal Liberation Front, and though they have no information to give about it, they refused to cooperate with the grand jury on principle. They were both jailed on civil contempt on November 17, 2009, and two years later, Scott was indicted under the Animal Enterprise Terrorism Act (AETA). He is currently out awaiting trial, while Carrie remains jailed in Iowa, where she may sit for another nine months. Carrie and Scott's involvement in RNC organizing, their affiliation with known anti-RNC organizers, and materials seized in RNC raids, have all been used so far in prosecutorial attempts to vilify them and their politics.

Scott is only the seventh person ever charged under the AETA. In February of 2009, four people in Santa Cruz, California, became the first AETA defendants accused of protecting activities including leafleting and chalkng sidewalks. Last spring, BJ Viehl and Alex Hall in Ush were also charged under the AETA in relation to mink liberations. BJ recently plead guilty, citing the improbability of a fair trial in such a heavily conservative state, and was sentenced to two years in February. Alex is still awaiting trial.

The same day that we go to court here for our next hearing, Jordan Halliday will start trial for felony contempt of court—a charge he is facing after months of incarceration on civil contempt for refusing to testify before a federal grand jury in Utah.

This fall, comrades from the Tin Can Comms Collective sustained a raid and two arrests at the G20 mobilization in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Upon their release from jail, they return to their home in Brooklyn, New York, the two arreest subjects were arrested to yet another raid.

This time on their house. State charges related to the G20 were subsequently dropped under circumstances that suggest the existence of an active federal investigation of Tin Cam's activities.

Needless to say, anarchists have taken radical tactics this year. Yet these cases are only one manifestation of the systematic repression of movements for social change. Even as anarchists have yet again become a primary target of State repression, the US continues its war on Black and Puerto Rican revolutionaries, and their allies.

The January 2009 charges were brought against eight former Black Panthers—the San Francisco 8 (SFB)—for the 1971 murder of a police officer. The case, re-opened with post-repression tactics, was based on fabricated evidence, torture and false confessions. The tele SFB are former or current political prisoners, and as of this writing, the last remaining conspiracy charge was dropped, leaving a single charge against Cisco Torres.

In recent months, the State of Pennsylvania has engaged in a new push for the prosecution of Mumia Abu-Jamal, falsely convicted of the murder of a police officer in 1982 and held on death row ever since. His supporters across the globe are mobilizing, yet again, to prevent this. Our movements have kept him alive thus far, and it falls on us yet again to prevent his State-sanctioned assassination.

Meanwhile, the Puerto Rican independence movement—which was the release of most of its political prisoners over the past decades—is preparing a final push for the release of two of the remaining three, Carlos Alberto Torres and Oscar Lopez Rivera.

At this moment, dozens of political prisoners sit in US prisons and jails, many of them having been there for decades and some who may never get out. The State would have us believe that political prisoners do not exist in this country, which holds a full quarter of the world's incarcerated people in its prison plantations. It is our common commitment to a radically transformed world that they intend to subvert with every new arrest, detention and prosecution, and our only defense is an acknowledgement of the fact that this is happening day in and day out, and making a commitment to fight it at every step of the way. As we look towards what could be the final stage of our own case, we're left to ponder the impact of our work. It is our hope that our supporters also support every person named in this letter, and every target of State repression left unnamed. Whether we're acquitted or convicted in this trial, the greater measure of our success will be the extent to which we build the movements to which we belong.

See you at trial,
the RNC 8

A Letter from Climate Prisoners

BY CLIMATE PRISONERS

This is a letter written by friends who are still imprisoned in Denmark. Also check out the prisoner support website—www.cop15-huagen.net

Some good is rotten (but not just) in Denmark. As a matter of fact, thousands of people have been considered, without any evidence, a threat to the society. Hundreds have been arrested and some are still under detention, waiting for judgment or under investigation. We want to tell the story from the peculiar viewpoint of those that still see the sky from behind the bars.

A United Nations meeting of crucial importance has failed because of several contradictions and tensions that have shown up during the COP15 (see EFJ January/February 2010). The primary concern of the powerful was the governance of the energy supply for never-ending growth. This was the case whether they were from the over-developed world, like the European countries or the US, or from the so-called developing countries, like China or Brazil.

At odds, hundreds of delegates and thousands of people in the streets have raised the issue that the rationale of life must be (and actually is) opposed to that of profit. We have strongly affirmed our will to stop all this. From the over-developed countries, we have been considered, without any evidence, a threat to the society. Hundreds have been arrested without any reason or clear evidence, or for participating in peaceful and legally legitimate demonstrations. Even mild examples of civil disobedience have been considered a serious threat to the social order.

In response, we ask: What order do we threaten and who ordered it? Is it that order in which we do not own our bodies anymore? The order well beyond the terms of any reasonable "social contract" that we would ever sign, where our bodies can be taken, managed, constrained and imprisoned without any serious evidence of crime. Is it that order in which the decisions are shared more and more from any social conflicts? Where the governance belongs less to people, not even through the parliament? As a matter of fact, non-democratic organizations like the World Trade Organization, the National Bank, the G-whatever rule beyond any control.

We are forced to notice that the theater of democracy is a broken one, as soon as one approaches the core of power, which is why we reclaim the power to the people. We reclaim the power over our own lives. Above all, we reclaim the power to counterpose the rationale of life and of the commons to the rationale of profit. It may have been declared illegal, but still we consider it fully legitimate.

Since no real space is left in the broken theater, we reclaimed our collective power (actually we expected it) to speak about the climate and energy issues. Which for us, involve critical nodes of global justice, survival of man and energy independence. We marched with our bodies.

We prefer to enter the space where the power is locked dancing and singing. We would have liked to do this at the Bella Center; to disrupt the session in accord with hundreds of delegates. But we were, as always, violently hampered by the police. They arrested our bodies in an attempt to arrest our ideas. We risked our bodies, trying to protect them by staying close to each other. We value our bodies; we need them to make love, to stay together and to enjoy life. They hold our brains, with beautiful bright ideas and views; they hold our hearts filled with passion and joy. Nevertheless, we risked them.

In fact, what would be the worth of thinking and feeling if our bodies did not move? Doing nothing and letting it happen is the worst form of complicity with the business that wanted to hack the U.N. meeting. At the COP15 we moved, and we will keep moving.

Exactly like love, civil disobedience can’t be told; we must make it with our bodies. Otherwise, we would not really think about what we love, and we would not really love what we think about. It’s as simple as that. It’s a matter of love, justice and dignity.

How the COP15 has ended proves that we were right. Many of us are paying what is mandatory under an obsessively, pervasive and repressive governance to be found guilty at the cost for nothing (along with the crime perhaps).

We are detained with absurd accusations of violence, (which actually did not take place) conspiracies and organizing actions.

We do not feel guilty for having shown, together with thousands, the reclamation of the independence of our lives from profit’s rule. If the laws oppose this, it is legitimate to peacefully break them.

We are just temporally docked, ready to sail again, with a wind stronger than ever. It’s a matter of love, justice and dignity.

"DOING NOTHING AND LETTING-IT-HAPPEN IS THE WORST FORM OF COMPLICITY... AT THE COP15 WE MOVED, AND WE WILL KEEP MOVING."
Ecuadorean Police Attacked and Killed Shuar Protesting

Recentely, Ecuadorian police attacked and killed peaceful Shuar protesters near the town of Macas, Ecuador, in the Amazon. The tribal people were protesting against a new Water Law and Mining Law. Both laws ignore their rights as stated in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous People and in the International Labor Organization’s Convention 169. The encroachment of logging, mining and oil companies, construction of hydroelectric dams, and the privatization of water are all large concerns to them as well.

Argentinian Campesinos’ Land Taken by Force

Campesinos are demanding recognition of their rights and calling for an end to logging and violence after a family was violently evicted from their land in the Argentine Province of Jujuy. Employees from the company KRAMSA, which is owned by a relative of the Argentine Ambassador to Bolivia, illegally evicted them to make way for a new transgenic soy plantation on their land. The family was jailed and released, while their water and livestock was poisoned.

Nevada Rounds Up 2,500 Wild Horses

Despite the fact that more than 34,000 wild horses and burros are currently being kept by the federal government in “short term corals,” this winter, federal officials began rounding up wild horses with helicopters from their Nevada habitat. The Bureau of Land Management claims the round-ups are necessary for the rangeland because they fear the land cannot support so many horses, but they only offer solutions of kidnapping and putting them up for adoption in the Midwest. In spite of a popular outcry, the roundups have proceeded, killing over 30 mustangs already.

Indigenous Peoples Caucus

In a statement from December 7, 2009, a broad coalition of indigenous communities demanded to be included in climate change negotiations and that the new climate treaty honor the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. The International Indigenous Peoples’ Forum on Climate Change states: “The protection of the collective rights of indigenous peoples must be guaranteed, including the recognition of our roles and contributions to climate change mitigation and adaptation through our traditional knowledge, innovations and practices.”

Oregon Hosts Gruesome Coyote Killing Derby

Hunters in southeast Oregon hosted a killing derby, giving prizes to people for killing “as many coyotes as possible.” Some prizes included rifles, binoculars and scopes. According to a January Big Game notice, the derby ran from January 16-17 throughout several counties. For a fee of $50, teams of two were permitted to kill as many coyotes as humbly possible. Winners of this cruel game were determined by the amount of severed ears hunters were able to acquire.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Being Sued Over Delay in Protecting Vital Panther Habitat

Late December 2009, the US Fish and Wildlife service recently had a formal 60 day notice of intent to sue brought to them by The Center for Biological Diversity, Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility, and the Council of Civic Associations. This comes after the agency failed to respond to a scientific petition to designate critical habitat for the endangered Florida panther. The petition, presented on September 17, 2009, provides evidence to US Fish and Wildlife that 4,866 square miles in southern Florida must be spared from further development in order to save and begin to recover the Florida panther.

Oil Spill in Texas

On Saturday, January 23, an oil tanker collided with a smaller vessel in the Houston ship channel, gashing a hole in the cargo hold. Anywhere from 2 to 17 thousand gallons of oil spilled in Port Arthur, marking the largest oil spill in the area in at least a decade. Luckily, reports have it that the spill occurred in a long, linear part of the channel with cement lining the sides, so the spill caused about as much damage as a choking victim inhaling smoke. The town of Port Arthur was briefly evacuated, as evaporation from the spill caused illness amongst residents. Meanwhile, an incredible amount of oil was washed into the Gulf of Mexico. Authorities reported only two “oiled” birds, one of which flew away to an undetermined place (probably Sediment Books.)

US Navy Wants to Build Training Ground on Vital Whale Habitat

The Southern Environmental Law Center and 13 other conservation groups recently challenged the United States Navy’s decision to build a Undersea Warfare Training Range between Jacksonville, Florida and Kings Bay, Georgia. This project would be built in the North Atlantic Right Whale habitat, and is precarious, because it would introduce multiple threats such as ship strikes, entanglement, and noise disturbances, causing high amounts of stress to the whales, especially mothers and calves. The Navy plans on laying cables through 500 square nautical miles for a training area, and plans on conducting 470 annual exercises that would deploy torpedoes, parachutes and sonobuoys, sonar waves and other noise pollution.

Arizona Land Swap Bill Passes through the Senate

December 17, 2009 the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee’s decided to vote in favor of the Southeast Arizona Land Exchange, and Conservation Act of 2009 bill (see EFJ November December 2009 Confronting Resolution Copper). The bill next approaches the house.

Arizona Representative. Raoul M. Grijalva is questioning the bill and has joined a lawsuit calling for a full investigation into Rio Tinto’s (International mining company) Human Rights Violation Record. Some of the allegations that have been brought against Rio Tinto are: paying native workers less than whites that helped contributed to Papua New Guinea’s violent civil war, with about 25 percent of the population.

The current proposed bill would destroy sacred land of the San Carlos Apache tribe. It would also be the largest copper mine in North America.

Crow Creek is Not For Sale

The trauma of Dakota people only continued there. Within the first few months of arrival at Crow Creek, hundreds of Dakota people died from the precarious conditions. After 1862, the United States government left our people with so little. In fact, the missionary John F. Williamson wrote “Nearly all the small children died in 1863.” The heartbeat from those events are still felt today. The people of Crow Creek live with that legacy, as do the rest of us with ancestors who were subjugated on these lands. Now, even what little we have is under attack again.

Sazaid’s stand in defense of the land is a rallying cry to the rest of the Oceti Sakowin (Seven Council Fires) of the Dakota Oyate (Nation). Though there winter weather has so far kept supporters from coming out next to Sazae, a steady stream of allies offering prayers, songs, food, supplies and encouragement continues throughout each day, and even more people show their solidarity through phone calls and emails. We know more of our people will be coming. Like Chairman Brandon Sazae, we will not allow these lands to be taken. We will stand with him.

In addition to your presence and prayers, we need supplies at the encampment site. The first objective at the site is staying warm. We need people to help cut, haul or donate wood to keep a fire going, lumber for building windbreaks and shelters, sandbags, blankets, sleeping bags (especially those made for below zero degree temperatures), hats, scarves, mittens, boots, tarp and tigis. Oceti Sakowin and other Indigenous relatives, please bring flags from your communities to show solidarity with the Crow Creek Oyate. Everyone bring banners—7,106 acres is a lot of ground on which to maintain our presence. In addition, we need food, flashlight, cookware, tools (shovels, axes, saws), concrete blocks, matches and water containers.

We need people who have other gifts to encourage these resistors to US land theft. Drummers and singers, your presence and support would be most welcome.
EARTHQUAKE, EXPLOITATION ECO-CRISIS: DISASTER CAPITALISM IN HAITI

By Reality

On January 12, a 7.0 magnitude earthquake broke out in Leogane, Haiti, shaking the streets of the capital city, Port-au-Prince into rubble. The earthquake has affected 852,000 people over 10 million people, leaving hundreds of thousands dead. With people suffering, starving and trying to get water, international aid flew into the country on corporate jets. Bill Clinton landed at the airport in the middle of the night; beneath the veneer of assistance lurks the specter of exploitation. Taking advantage of the social and political capitulation, corporations invested their energy in wresting business from the weakened group of a devastated country. Citigroup, the corporation that coined the term “plutonomy” to describe an ideal economic structure, as well as earth-destroying Caterpillar and their various subsidiaries, performed the violent task of earth-destroying Caterpillar. Haiti’s government has deliberately turned away shipments of medical supplies on several occasions, leading French authorities to denounce the U.S. as an “occupation” force. The largest source of finance to Haiti, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), has deliberately turned away from the Haïtian economy.

The exploitation of Haiti’s crisis by global business presents just one more stage in the opportunistic history of US engagement with Haiti. Founded through a slave revolution against French colonists, Haiti’s popular tradition tells a different story than its official history, which the US military has wrought with dictatorship and economic control. The social inequality that rendered Haiti subject to white imperialism is represented today by the division between non-profits functioning under the auspices of disaster relief and the people subjected to their control. Female-bodied people are especially subjected to the heavy hand of imperial ‘aid,’ as food and material sovereignty has been left in the hands of patriarchal US military. Several EFLLers have moved to Haiti to provide assistance to the starving and poor. They should be lauded for their compassion. In many ways, as they seek to help people, they are up against a military invasion. For how long and to what extent this racist occupation takes hold is unknowable, but if the future of Haiti repeats its history, this military-led corporate interference will not be extinguished without a fight.

In insurrectionary Mexico Celebrates Black Christmas

By Bootleg

In the bleak landscape of modern Mexico, the news is spurting into insurrectionary action. Where 80 percent of the population live in or below the poverty line and the wealthiest man in Latin America, Carlos Slim, presides over oil, telecommunications, and the bank, corporations plunder the ecologically diverse waters, lands, and skies in spite of public protests. On December 1, the rage of the people repressed exploded in coordinated strikes throughout the nation. This rage stormed not simply for better wages and less poverty, but for the survival of the human as well as non-human animals.

From Tijuana to Mexico City, the mythical pyramids of Teotihuacan to the metropolis of San Luis Potosi, riots and sabotage sent ripples of insurrection through the night. The following outlines the autonomously co-operative insurrection and attempts to explain its rational.

Attacks focused on December 31, 2009, New Years Eve. Members of the anarchist group, Comunidades Autónomas contra las Acumulaciones de Capital (CAFÉ), launched an attack on the Port of Tijuana. CAFÉ members–the Anarchist movement in Mexico–have written: “Through our actions, we are creating a world that is no longer limited to the capital.” In 2016, they launched an attack on the Port of Tijuana. CAFÉ members–the Anarchist movement in Mexico–have written: “Through our actions, we are creating a world that is no longer limited to the capital.”

In Tijuana, an autonomous affinity group of anarchists opened fire on three private police cars with machine guns, in the name of their own Black Christmas. Claiming the attack in the name of incarcerated animal and earth liberationists, the anarchists followed through on their promises of destruction of consumer money from seven OXXO convenience stores. The group ché OXXO stations, because the stores represent the fastest growing convenience store chain in Latin America–a blight on the land, which sells commodities gleaned from the earth through slavery and environmental devastation. “All capitalist businesses are our objective,” the group’s anonymous communiqué reports. “All government installations are our objective as well.”

For its part, the Mexican government has stepped up raids against environmentalists and animal rights activists. One 16-year-old kid was arrested for allegedly possessing molotov cocktails, and put on house arrest after admitting to ELF-related arson. Although he was able to escape and is now on the run, three other people, arrested in another police raid against the ELF, are not so lucky. Of them, aged 16 and 17, are currently incarcerated after being snatched on the third. One perryn has been arrested in Tijuana for the alleged possession of a gun. Even still, the anarchical struggle continues and will not stop until total and complete liberation.
By MODESTO ANARCHO

Interview from the upcoming 3 year anniversary issue of Modesto Anarcho!

In mid-2009, Modesto Anarcho (MAC—about our business) became aware of the occupation of the California Valley Miwok Tribe (CVMT) to occupy their foreclosed home in Stockton, located in the California Central Valley about 20 miles north of Modesto. We contacted them and the next day three of us drove out to meet them. We found their house, which is the only thing that the tribe owns, with its gates welded shut, guard dogs on patrol, and the occupants firmly situated inside. Although we couldn’t get onto the property due to the occupation, we talked to a tribal member about their struggle and offered some food and copies of our magazine. We traded emails, and soon after, this interview was conducted.

Modesto Anarcho: Many people do not know the history of the Native peoples in the Central Valley, can you tell us a little about the history of the Miwoks?

California Valley Miwok Tribe: Previous to Rancherias being created in California, the Miwok People’s territory covered 10 counties. Now our Tribe is fighting to retain its Tribal Property that consists of one and a half acres, located in Stockton, California.

MA: How does your tribe use the house that is located in Stockton?

CVMT: The Tribal Property at 10601 Escondido Pl. Stockton, California 95212 has a multi-purpose function. Since our tribe is a landless tribe, the piece of property, including the building, is considered to the Tribe to be its reservation and is utilized as such. Until such time as the tribe is able to acquire a large tract of land for the benefit of future tribal members (the house is all we have). The Tribe conducts official Tribal “governmental” business, day-to-day office duties, Tribal Programs, Tribal Meetings and a portion of the building is used for housing.

MA: What brought your house to foreclosure?

CVMT: Our PL-93 638 Mature Status Contract (BIA) has been illegally withheld for two years and our Indian Gaming Revenue Sharing Trust Fund (ISSERTF) monies have been illegally stopped since the end of 2005. Without any funds coming in, the Tribe had no way to pay its mortgage on the only piece of property, the place the Tribe calls “home.” Please see our DOT US website for further info: www.CaliforniaValleyMiwoks.org

MA: Why did people physically occupy your house? How did you go about planning that people were not going to be able to easily get into the house?

CVMT: The Tribe decided to stand its ground when it was threatened with eviction. We had no choice. Where were we supposed to go? Our monies have been illegally withheld for no good reason, our jobs lost, our medical benefits lost with our jobs. We tribal members have been using our personal money to keep the Tribe going, to keep the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) Food Program open for the people in need to still be able to get their monthly rations of food. We had to make our point clear that we were no longer going to be pushed out and forgotten like yesterday’s trash! We are human beings. We are not just names and/or numbers on a piece of paper. We needed the Department of the Interior Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, DC, to take notice of what was being allowed to happen to our Tribe. We were pushed in a corner and had no other choice but to go into survival mode and stand our ground. The Tribe went into a vote and decided to go in to lockdown and barricade itself in until the Department of the Interior would be forced to take notice of our devastating situation and agree to sit down at the table with us to resolve our immediate problem that had been ignored up until we decided to stand our ground.

I can’t answer the second part of your question, because our crisis isn’t over yet. We are still negotiating.

MA: How have the state and their police responded to your situation? How have other people and/or institutions tried to hinder your efforts?

CVMT: Well, the state still hasn’t released the Tribe’s money. I would say that the sad part to this dilemma is seeing some of the people believing the negative stuff that had been going out on blogs. It hurts our hearts to see people say such cruel things when they don’t know the whole truth behind the situation. We are confident that the truth will prevail, so we don’t follow the blogs. Although we do want to thank those who stood by us and still stand with us today...

MA: In what ways have other tribes and communities/groups offered you support?

CVMT: We are thankful for the internet radio talk shows, TV hosts, Veteran Affairs, some pocket members of the American Indian Movement (AIM), legal services, individual concerned citizens (Indians and non-Indian peoples), universities, special interest groups, Canadian Indians, doctors, Calaveras Band of Mi-Wuk Indians, Calaveras County Mountain Miwuk, Historical Shingle Springs Miwok Indians, Modesto Anarcho, Ghost Machine Group, United Native Americans Inc., WPFW Nightwolf, andOnnativeregion. Recently, Chairperson sruley did a presentation at the Consumnes River College in Sacramento in which they have asked how they can help show their support for the Tribe. Also, UC San Diego has passed a resolution in support of the California Valley Miwok Tribe, and they have continued to be strong advocates to help our tribe get justice.

MA: Anything you would like to add?

CVMT: We (“The Tribe”) are asking for help from the general public. Please help our tribe survive. Help us protect not only our history/culture but the native history that is a big part of California and the United States. EAGLE ROCK IS SACRED!

BY JOHN SCHERTOW

The Michigan Department of Environmental Quality (MDEQ), has shamelessly and underhandedly given its final approval for Kennecott's proposed Eagle Mine project: a nickel and copper sulfide mine on the Yellow Dog Plains in Michigan's upper peninsula. In issuing the approval, the MDEQ overstepped the Keweenaw Bay Indian Community's (KBIC) treaty rights and dismissed a 2009 ruling by Administrative Law Judge Richard Patterson, who found that Eagle Rock is a place of spiritual importance to the Anishinaabe People and should be protected. Judge Patterson, in his ruling, had stated that both Kennecott and the MDEQ "did not properly address the impact on the sacred rock outcrop known as Eagle Rock" and suggested that they move the mine's entry point to a place somewhere "away from the rock."

The Yellow Dog Watershed Preserve, who works along side KBIC, and others opposed to the mine explained how the judge's ruling was unnecessary, "...because it pertained to Eagle Rock as a place of worship. They believe that a place of worship must be a building and therefore negate comments that were not in favor of the mining company."

However, the MDEQ did much more than dismiss the ruling and deny the sacredness of Eagle Rock. It handed the matter down to a Senior Policy Advisor, who made the decision on his own just two days before the MDEQ was formally dissolved. In doing so, it completely overstepped any sense of judicial propriety.

Cynthia Fryer, Campaign Director for the Yellow Dog Watershed Preserve, comments: "What just happened here? The MDEQ, as party to a State of Michigan Administrative Contested Case process, just unilaterally bypassed both the legal process and Administrative Law Judge Patterson in making a sweeping declaration and finding of law. This sweeping "judgment" was made not by Judge Patterson, not by past MDEQ Director Stephen Chester, not by the interim MDEQ Director Jim Sygo, but by a Senior Policy Advisor within the MDEQ. This was done as a final MDEQ action on the matter—on the day before the MDEQ was to be dissolved and the new MDNR Director was to take office."

"How blatant can this be? This is the dramatic action of a DEQ that hopes as a last ditch effort to resolve the Kennecott issue and allow this mine on the Yellow Dog Plains—before their authority is superseded by a new agency. The delegation of MDEQ Director's final decision on the matter, was given to Senior Policy Advisor Frank J. Ruswick, Jr. two weeks ago. There was no known correspondence from Judge Patterson to the DEQ, Kennecott or the petitioners during this time frame. But out of the blue, a day before MDEQ dissolution, this MDEQ policy advisor made a judgment, ruling and order granting Kennecott both a Part 532 mining permit and a ground water discharge permit and vacating a remand order made by then Director Stephen Chester concerning Eagle Rock as a "place of worship." A policy advisor of the MDEQ became a Judge and a MDEQ Director and has so ruled—and we must accept that!"

"This is an egregious act that now will absolutely require appeal to a higher court, and should require an appeal to the new DNRE Director Rebecca Humphries and the Governor of this state. We should not sit by and accept such action as the accepted mode of "lawfulness" in this state."

"KBIC is also urging the public to become more involved in the effort to protect the Great Lakes, stating, "You, however, can make a difference in protecting, and guarding our most precious natural resources and the gift of water—our Great Lakes. We ask that you continue to become involved and educate yourself to find out all that you can about sulfide acid mining and the proposed mines for the Upper Peninsula, especially the Eagle Rock in the Yellow Dog Plains."

Klamath Justice Coalition Haunts Logging on Klamath Sacred Sites

BY AHDU

The Klamath Justice Coalition organized a blockade in northern California on December 19, to stop a U.S. Forest Service logging contractor from damaging any sites held sacred by the Indigenous Karuk Nation.

Before daybreak on December 16, members of the indigenous-led coalition gathered at Orleans Mountain Lookout Road within the Six Rivers National Forest and set up a large fire in the roadway. Fortunately, the logging crew took the moral and legally responsible path, and turned back without involving the police.

"This morning's small but important victory marks the beginning of our campaign to defend Karuk sacred sites and protect the health of our forests," said Karuk Ceremonial Leader Leaf Hillman in a press release issued after the protest.

According to the Klamath Justice Coalition, the company was initially supposed to be part of the Orleans Community Fuel Reduction and Forest Health Project (OCFR). The OCFR, which actually stands for the "Orleans Culture and Forest Reduction plan," says Hillman, "is a plan to reduce the threat of wildfires and increase forest health, while preserving the cultural sites associated with the Panamint World Renewal Ceremonial District."

For generations, the Karuk People have held a semi-annual ceremony where, as Jennifer Huang from the Sacred Land Film Project notes, "a priest travels through the forest on the tribe's traditional trails to locations where various dances and prayers are held. This is the same area that was the subject of the historic G-O Road case in the 1980s, in which the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Native Americans did not have a First Amendment right to stop a Forest Service logging road from penetrating their sacred High Country."

Following almost three years of consultation, the U.S. Forest Service finally reached an agreement with the Karuk Nation and other non-native residents in the Klamath Valley to proceed with the OCFR. In the end, however, the Forest Service Supervisor betrayed the agreement and the public's trust by "recklessly" granting a U.S. logging company rights to harvest 914 acres of the forested land, held sacred or not.

"This is not the first time that (Forest Service Supervisor Tyrone Kelly) has shown a particular insensitivity to Tribal cultural issues," explains Klamath Justice. "Last year he oversaw the bull dozing of... land disputed to be Indian Trust Land. The act not only destroyed a home, but destroyed a nearby archeological site and a contemporary dance ground."

Also, during last year's wildfires, Kelly directed the construction of firebreaks and forced the use of heavy equipment that destroyed sections of "medicine man trails" and high-country areas used during annual World Renewal Ceremonies. Representatives from the Karuk tribe urged Kelly to build the breaks in areas that were less sensitive, but the concerns were ignored.

"Its like Kelly is hell bent on destroying our sacred areas one step at a time," says Hillman. Nevertheless, the Karuk, along with the Klamath Justice Coalition are committed to fighting the culturally sensitive region and compelling the US Forest Service to honor its word.

REBELS TAKE ON THE DEATH STAR

BY ATTILA

We were pacing around outside of the Greenville County Jail in the darkness of late Fall. Four of our fellow eco-defenders were still locked up inside. Boredom and impatience were starting to get to me, sucking away the tremendous energy of the amazing action we had pulled off that morning. But things were looking up; I was not yet ready to give up.

"Ten years after WTO. Not too bad," commented another Earth Firster standing outside with me. Oh, yeah. N30. It had almost slipped my mind. A decade ago, when many of us were fighting global capitalist institutions, we thought that a new world was just around the corner. Here in North Carolina, we may not have stopped the construction of the coal plant that we have been fighting for several years, but the movement against coal has never seemed stronger.

A grin came across my face. We had just pulled off one of the most positive, cheapest and media-savvy actions in my history of fighting for a wild planet. Everyone was excited. Earlier that Fall, we were tipped off that the generator to the Cliffside, North Carolina, coal plant was being shipped through South Carolina. This giant metal beast had come across the ocean from Japan and landed in Charleston, North Carolina. From there it would slowly make its way across the state. Once it was loaded onto a transporting rig, this monstrousity weighed 1.9 million pounds and was 300-foot-long. It required several trucks in the front and some in the back to move it along at a lumbering pace of 5-20 miles per hour. The transport contractors had to reinforce bridges and raise power lines in its path.

We codenamed the generator Death Star, as we thought this was an appropriate name for a large, slow-moving, planet-destroying object. Croatian Earth First! and the newly reformed Asheville Rising Tide decided that the best way to stop the ongoing construction of the Cliffside plant was to deny it its cold, steel heart.

The first step was to find the damn thing. This was the first time that the shipment of a key component of a coal plant would be blocked. We had no idea what it looked like, because the pictures taken of it could not capture its entirety. Lucky for us, the Death Star was a spectacle to the people of South Carolina. Nothing so large had ever passed through their towns, and so many news outlets covered its movements.

The movement of the Death Star turned out to be much less reliable than we had anticipated. Saturated ground after rainy days would delay it, as would the terrible communication between transportation officials and the contractors. The move across South Carolina ended up taking three months instead of the 30 days we had initially heard. We went on a number of wild goose chases throughout the state, looking for the generator in places where it would not arrive for weeks. Our initial plan was to stop it near the North Carolina border, only a few miles from the construction site, because the shipment took so long, we got impatient and decided on a location much further into South Carolina.

We decided on the least number of lockdowns we would need to prove our point, get press and insure the safety of those people risking arrest. These people would climb onto the generator and lock down to highly visible but hard-to-reach places. Our devices were simple "black bears" made of PVC elbow joints. In our experience, the police departments are taking the time to cut people out anymore, so the integrity of the device seems less important. (Instead, cops force people to unlock using pain holds, pepper spray or tasers.)

When everything was in place, we deployed on November 30, a day when climate activists were planning to demonstrate and shut down streets in a number of cities across the country. The site where the Death Star was parked that morning had minimal security, so our folks had time to climb around and arrange themselves in ideal positions. We draped a few banners around the area and then waited for a response. The police did a lot of head-scratching that day.

Our people were just high enough they had to call in the fire department to get them down. The generator was a tourist attraction already, so now we had curious on-lookers wondering why people were locking themselves to this giant piece of steel. During this time, our media team got rolling, and we managed to get coverage in 150 media outlets, including the New York Times.

The occupation of the site lasted about two hours, and four people were arrested. While the police were generally calm, they got folks to unlock by threatening them with tasers, going as far as shooting one off into the ground underneath a person who was locked down.

The increased use of tasers is something that we as a movement need to look at. It is difficult to tell someone to stay strong when there is a chance that they will be electrocuted. Pain holds and chemical weapons might hurt a lot, but they do not paralyze your nervous system in the same way that tasers do. If we continue using blockades and lockdowns as a tactic, we need to think about the effect that tasers have on the length and safety of these actions.

"...the best way to stop the ongoing construction of the Cliffside plant was to deny it its cold, steel heart."

Our folks were released from jail without having to post bond, and have since gone to trial and were given credit for time served. That means that we spent zero funds on legal costs. Everyone is itching to figure out how we will next strike at the Cliffside plant. Cliffside might get built. It may even open. Construction has run over budget already, but Duke Energy, the builder of the plant, has unfortunately passed the costs on to citizens through a controversial rate hike. But even as the generator reached the construction site, Progress Energy, the other large electricity provider in North Carolina, said that it would shut down 30 percent of its coal capacity in the state within eight years. This has only come about because of a concerted, system-wide approach by ecodefenders.

It is empowering to know that, while we are fighting a coal plant in North Carolina, there are folks fighting plants in Ohio and Virginia. About 100 amazing activists with Climate Ground Zero put their bodies on the line in West Virginia last year, raising awareness about the fight against mountaintop removal mining and suffering arrests and repression in the process. Elsewhere, people are attacking coal financing, and it’s all paying off. The coal industry is just about to get buried in that giant grave that it has dug for itself in West Virginia.

People locked down to the Cliffside coal generator.

Oil Lines Sabotaged, MEND Ends Ceasefire

After a three month long ceasefire, the Movement for the Emancipation of the Niger Delta (MEND) is back in the game. On January 8, unknown militants attacked one of Chevron’s major oil producing lines of the Niger Delta. Statements that were released the next day reported that Chevron’s 20,000 barrels per day of crude oil came to a screeching halt.

The group of gunmen reported, “This attack was sanctioned by MEND but did not involve our fighters.”

Armed saboteurs in the Niger River delta, home to Africa’s largest oil and gas industry, have shut down more than 25 percent of Nigeria’s crude production over the course of the four years through 2009. January 30, the day of MEND’s announcement of ending their ceasefire, another sabotaged oil line was discovered on one of Royal Dutch Shell’s pipelines.

MEND has made pretty clear their desire for “control of its resources and land.” Due to infrastructural nightmares destroying their land, they’ve yet to obtain this.

New Year, New Lives!

As we entered a new year others give new lives to 150 bens. The bens were released from their battery cages in the UK. The liberators proclaimed, “happy new year to all prisoners.”

Up in Arms at the Arms Factory

More than 300 protestors converged on the Brighton, UK, EDO/ITT to remember 2009 and the catastrophic 22 day bombing of Gaza. Protesters met up at a park equipped with coffins and a banner with a thousand handprints representing the lives that were lost during the attacks on Gaza. Everyone was dressed to impress (all black with masks of course).

Protestors marched from the park to a junction in the road that meet with the road that the factory is located on. At this point many protesters split off to race to the rear of the factory. Other protesters chose to conveniently stay behind to block access to the road and read the names of those 1417 victims of the Israeli bombings.

As the protesters approached the factory many went inside of the fence. After leaving that area and repeatedly evading the police around 100 protesters attempted to go onto Barclays Bank property. Unfortunately riot police headed the protesters off. At the end of the day five arrests were made. For more extensive coverage of this smash EDO demonstration as well as past actions and background on the campaign please visit www.msagedoi.org.

ALF Versus Pig Slaughterhouse Near Paris, France

Late November 2009 the ALF made a special visit to a pig slaughterhouse in Houdan, France. Despite difficult weather, the saboteurs were still able to set multiple trucks on fire. They signed their communiqué, “Nothing can stop the ALF.”

Non-Stop Action Against Coal Mining in Scotland

In early January, the Penicuik opencast mine in Scotland was host to a band of saboteurs. In all, 13 destructive pieces of machinery were damaged. One giant earth moves, six dump trucks, four standard earth moves and two flood light generators were all demolished. The site of the open cast mine had already been mined and the machinery was supposed to be transported to the Mainhill are nearby. Fortunately, that area was still occupied by the Mainhill forest camp.

On January 13, at the Mainhill Woods site in another action, a drill rig was sabotaged. The machine was part of a duo of earth destroyers that was operating on a different opencast mine planned for South Lanarkshire. For a further list of actions that has taken place over the course of recent resistance to coal mining in Scotland, see page 16.

Mexican ELF and ALF go Tag Team to Bring the Heat

On January 17, both the Mexican ALF and ELF visited a Coca Cola factory in Ecatepec, Mexico city to strike. The group placed two packages of explosives in the front window of the plant, completely destroying the windows. The action was dedicated, “with all our desire for freedom to the prisoners Victor, Emmanuel, Abraham, Femin and Socorro of Tijuana.” The activists also conveyed their hope for further actions, saying “We hope that direct solidarity multiplies in clandestine actions, for their unconditional liberation.”

The group’s reasoning for their action was also very eloquently worded in their communiqué, expressing frustration with humyn exploitation, the privatization of resources and environmental deterioration. They were also clear about their desire to focus on quality actions, strengthening themselves to sabotage with renewed zest and creativity: “It is 2010,” they declare, “a new year with new strategies and new tactics but with the same courage to act.”

“What do you think will happen when we set fire to your house and you are off to work? No fire brigade for you we guess.”
Militant Feminism:

BY COMRADE BLACK

Juliet Belmas was arrested in January 1983, at the age of 18, to 20 years in prison for her involvement in the militant Guerrilla groups Direct Action (DA), and The Winnipeg Fire Brigade. DA claimed responsibility for the Cherokee Dam Explosion, an event that took place in 1978, when a natural gas pipeline exploded, killing 24 people and injuring 160. The group's objective was to cause landowner to pay for damage caused by their activities. The Winnipeg Fire Brigade was a group of firemen and firefighters who formed a radical wing of the International Workers of the World (IWW) to protest against the conditions of their work and to demand better wages and working conditions.

Juliet Belmas was involved with the DA for several years, and was one of the few women active in the group. She was known for her courage and dedication, and was one of the few women to be severely injured in an explosion. She was later released from prison and went on to become a prominent activist for the women's liberation movement. She remains an inspiration to many, and her story is a testament to the power of radical activism and the importance of solidarity among women.

CB: What does Militancy and Direct Action mean to you?

Juliet Belmas: Militancy means a constant preparedness for the point of no return. Direct action means big tent action by committee.

CB: Is property destruction and sabotage violent? How do you define violence?

Juliet Belmas: Property damage and sabotage are violence if aimed at the epicenter of an intended target. I define violence as a natural part of being H-U-M-A-N.

It's obvious; politics is violence: needs force, needs Christ, needs money, needs politics, needs growth, politics needs growth, politics needs growth, politics needs growth, politics needs growth, politics needs growth. It's a vicious cycle. Violence is the only tool we have.

CB: What was the goal of your militant direct action? Why did you choose militant direct action over other tactics? And how did you choose your targets?

Juliet Belmas: The goal was not to annoy people but to scare them, to make them blink. Picketing seemed like a waste of time; nothing ever changes. I targeted the Hot Video, because it was doing business near my family home in Port Coquitlam, and it was very disturbed by it. I wanted to destroy it. It was a smash and burn. I wanted to shut it down. I wanted to make it known that we were there.

CB: When people label me a terrorist it hits two birds with one stone, first, I get to claw back the monotonous representation of a word that continues to misinform our understanding of history throughout the ages. Secondly, it makes me laugh. For instance, when I tell stories highlighting my exploits, people always say to me: "Really? Why were you in prison?" and I always take the opportunity to explain it was for political extremism. If I use the word terrorism, they are always surprised and say, "Ah yeh?".

Juliet Belmas: The Winnipeg Fire Brigade was a group of firemen and firefighters who formed a radical wing of the International Workers of the World (IWW) to protest against the conditions of their work and to demand better wages and working conditions. They were known for their courage and dedication, and were involved in several high-profile protests and direct actions.

For my seventeenth birthday, my oldest sister gave me a book called "The Women's Room" by Marilyn French. It was a feminist
I started my own DIY punkzine, called Opposition (I criticized punks for doing nothing but sitting on their asses). I joined a punk band called No Exit and penned "Nothing New," one of the best punk anthems that came out of the Vancouver punk scene. At the same time, I was making anti-war and anti-fascist posters using clippings of images of guerilla fighters from Time magazine. It was a big time of connectivity, channeling my anger into creative energy, and that's what lead up to my slide into militancy.

CB: Some people today feel that feminism "has gone too far," that women are now equal to men, and that there is no need for feminism anymore. How do you feel about this, do you see a need for feminism today?

JB: Level playing field, hah! I see a dire need for feminists (both male and female) to unite around truth-telling and self-empowerment, whichever way they choose.

CB: What do you say to all those people that think feminists hate men?

JB: I say, the 80s called and wants its dogma back.

CB: Second wave feminism was very anti-poor, where as third wave feminism adopted a pro-sex stance. Was the first bombing of the Red Hot Video was based on a pro-sex stance? Would an action like this have been a product of the feminism of the time, or would it have still happened if the entire situation occurred 10 years later when Little Sister's was fighting against censorship, if a store like REIV was selling rape and seamy films in the height of the pro-sex feminist movement?

JB: We were all radical militant second wave believers who thought that video porn should be prohibited (censored) because it was dangerous desensitizing to the viewer and correlated with increased levels of violence against women and children. Also, mainstream feminist groups did such a good job picking the moron and setting up the issue of snuff pornography in the collective consciousness that direct action was able to spring board into public discourse.

I don't think it would have the same galvanizing effect today, because Third Wave feminists express themselves differently. By claiming their personal traumas and histories as a "universal" narration, they are getting people out of the ashes of censorship and re-constructing female identity through empowering labels previously defined and "undermined" such as prostitution and pornography. Today, feminist third-wavers are choosing to control their modes of production rather than smash them. It's so easy, because the forty, fifty year olds like me did our thing, now the twenty, thirty year olds are interested in doing their thing, and on and on it goes.

CB: Why did you choose the spelling you used in Opposition?

JB: The Brigade as a collective chose "wim­ min" as the spelling, because some com­ rades thought that by using the term we'd be able to solidify in our own minds what the movement (outside Canada). In other words, we chose the word thinking it would make our Direct Action message more accessible. To­ day, our target audience wonders "what's up with that word?"

CB: How did your actions affect the overall movement? Did you have any support from the establishment or police?

JB: Our actions caused sorrow, tears, confusion and the regular trademarks of repression. At the time, we did not have widespread support, but the individual people who knew us within those movements supported us passionately, and still do. Conversely, I barely knew anyone in the movement when I was arrested and at the time I did not get the same sort of support as the others.

CB: What about race? As mainly white, het­ erosexual, activists, and largely from middle class backgrounds did your privilege play into any of this? How did this work in solidarity with People of Color, especially indigenous people who’s land we used to live on?

JB: I had a hunch that there was more to life than my white bread dysfunctional culture when I started hanging out at the Smiling Buddha and other punk venues in the inner city. I was from the suburbs, right away my family and friends started making a case for violence and homelessness saying that it wasn't safe for me to be downtown. They pointed to local newspaper stories that linked indiscriminate violence with homelessness and Native people in the area. I remember reading them and thinking about them and how my white, privileged background played into all this. I did get to work in solidarity with First Nations was awesome! One time, we (me and my DA comrades) were heading to the Stein River anti-war for a week and REIV and we had to pass through First Nations ter­ ritory to get there. There we were moving slow in the stolen four wheel drive—our eyes were on the winding road all the time. When suddenly about twenty First Nations youth appeared out of thin air and blocked the road in front of us with logs and trees so we could not move. We really did this was a campaign of non-white direct ac­ tions aimed at an aggressive logging company in the area that had marked the last natural water/woodland for clear cut logging, so we raised our fists in solidarity, we made a peace offering with a cigarette tape of John Mendell talking about his life experiences. By respecting Native people’s roles we can work in solidarity with People of Color to protect the earth. That’s how solidarity works.

This interview was conducted by Comrade Black, who is a genderqueer green anarchist feminist from Victoria BC. This is only half of the interview, the other half will appear in the next issue (Selurth/May-June) of the Journal.
MAINSHILL SOLIDARITY CAMP

BY COAL ACTION SCOTLAND

The Mainshill Solidarity Camp was situated in Mainshill Wood, the site of a proposed open cast coal mine in South Lanarkshire, Scotland. The occupation came to an end when it was forcibly evicted on the January 25, 2010, after seven months of intense activity in the area.

South Lanarkshire is one of the most heavily mined areas in Europe, with four active open cast sites already encircling the nearby village of Douglas. Coal Action Scotland started the campaign with actions at coal terminals and open cast sites around the country, which led to the occupation of the site at Mainshill in June 2009. Since then there have been at least 30 different blockades, digger dives and acts of sabotage on coal sites across Scotland’s central belt.

One of the main focuses of the Mainshill campaign has been the physical defense of a small community from the greed of a major national coal company, in this case Scottish Coal and the aristocratic landowner Lord Home. The local opposition to the open cast was completely disregarded, despite more than 600 objections being lodged from a population of around 1,000. As a result of this, local support has been incredible, including donations of food almost everyday. This helped us throughout the brutal winter with temperatures reaching a low of zero degree’s Fahrenheit.

The campaign connects direct action against heavy industry and climate change with the people who suffer immediately from its causes. Instead of the carbon reductionism currently being offered as a solution at the global political table, the campaign at Mainshill seeks to build an alternative of community self-determination and genuinely participatory democratic processes.

Mainshill Wood was home to an abundant variety of wildlife, including roe deer, badgers, bats, voles, moles, buzzards, orchids and pine martens. The 343 acre site has now been cleared of all the trees; bulldozers and diggers have moved in to destroy the remaining habitat.

The camp had been preparing for the eviction since it was set up. The eviction lasted five days with 70 people resisting and a total of 45 arrests. Fourteen tree houses, three sky rafts, and many ground defenses—including a tunnel and a multi-layered fort were evicted. In the UK, protest sites are evicted by a private company called the National Eviction Team who in this case was hired by Scottish Coal.

On Monday January 25, a team of around 100 climbers, tunnellers, bailiffs and police descended on the camp to begin the eviction process. Communal structures and ground defenses were torn down as climbers began the difficult task of removing rowdy protesters from the trees. Many people came from local areas and further afield to show their support. Also a contingent of local youth cause havoc by stealing the eviction teams tools and roaming about the site.

For the duration of the eviction, the site was unsecured; this allowed other supporters to get in and cause problems. Barricades were built, chainsaw work was brought to a halt on-site, with one person wrapping herself up in rope and “throwing herself” at the chainsaws.

For five days the National Eviction Team traversed the entirety of the site, systematically removing clusters of defenses. On day three they were surprised to find out that a small village of protesters (known as the “Ewoks”) were hiding in the small plantation. Due to bulldozers crushing trees just meters from their defenses, their plans to stay hidden were abandoned.

Many people were shocked at the brutality inflicted on them by both the police and the eviction team. In some cases, protesters hands and feet were cable tied as climbers attached them to a rope and lowered them down. Another example of their complete disregard for safety occurred on day three as protesters in sycamore trees—who had climbed higher to evade capture—had the treehouses below them removed and burnt, along with all their bedding. They were then left overnight with no shelter in freezing temperatures.

The last person to be evicted was forced to reveal himself after being surrounded by five bulldozers, with dozens of terrified deer around him. All 45 arrestees were held overnight and charged with Aggravated Trespass, apart from two people who were held over the weekend—one who was arrested simply for taking photographs on the site.

All five days saw the violence inflicted by the state on those who try to create positive change, and the collision between the courts, police and corporations.

The campaign against a new open cast mine at Mainshill is by no means over. Pressure is expected to be put on the contractors operating at the site, and the campaign will also begin looking to other communities and areas affected by coal projects in Scotland. This will include hosting protest site skill shares, gatherings to link community environmental struggles and the occupation of more threatened land.

This eviction is being seen not as an end, but as the beginning of a campaign of community-based radical direct action sweeping Scotland’s central belt. If the vast expansion of the coal industry in the UK is to be stopped, it will require more places like the Mainshill Solidarity Camp.

West Virginia protesters associated with Climate Ground Zero and Mountain Justice halted blasting on January 21, at Coal River Mountain with a three-person tree-sit. David Aaron Smith, 23, Amber Nitchman, 19 and Eric Blevins, 28 occupied platforms approximately 60-feet up two tulip poplar trees and one oak tree. The location was next to where Massey Energy is blasting to build an access road to the Brushy Fork Impoundment on its Bee Tree Strip Mine. Their banners state: “Save Coal River Mtn.,” “EPA Stop the Blasting” and “Windmills Not Toxic Spills.”

“Massey Energy is a criminal corporation with over 4,500 documented violations of the Clean Water Act, yet the government has given them permission to blast next to a dam full of toxic coal waste that will kill 998 people if it fails,” said Blevins.

The site’s commitment to the battle has been widely reviewed, published in Science Magazine which states, “Mining permits are being issued despite the preponderance of scientific evidence that impacts are pervasive and irreversible and that mitigation cannot compensate for the losses.”

The sitters are calling for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to put an end to mountaintop removal and encourage the land-holding companies to develop clean energy production. The lack of EPA enforcement in mountaintop removal encouraged Josh Graupera, 19, a member of the support team, to take part in this action. “I knew that until I took an active role in the struggle to end MTR (Mountain Top Removal), I was passively condoning the destruction of one of the oldest and most diverse ecosystems on this continent,” Graupera added. “In this moment, I act out of personal concern for the safety of water from toxic sludge, air from smog, and mountains from annihilation.”

The Brushy Fork Impoundment is permitted to hold more than nine billion gallons of the toxic coal waste and currently contains 8.2 billion gallons. Brushy Fork’s foundation is built on a honeycomb of abandoned underground mines. If the foundation were to collapse, the slurry would blow out from all sides of the mountain. According to Marfork Coal Company’s emergency warning plan regarding the impoundment, in case of a front dam breach, a 40-foot wall of sludge, 72-foot at its peak height, would engulf communities as far as 14 miles away.

“Brushy Fork sludge dam places the downstream communities in imminent danger. The threat of being inundated by a wall of toxic sludge is always present. Blasting next to this dam increases the risk as well as destroying the opportunity for renewable wind energy,” said Coal River Mountain Watch’s Vernon Haltom.

According to the Coal River Wind Project, the wind energy produced by a turbine farm on Coal River Mountain could power 70,000 homes, provide more permanent jobs for locals and, annually, bring over a million dollars in tax breaks revenue to Raleigh County than coal currently does.

After blocking Massey Energy’s operations on the Bee Tree Permit for nine days, Amber Nitchman, 19, and Eric Blevins, 28 descended from their respective trees. They both occupied two tulip poplar trees—originally accompanied by a third tree sitter, David Aaron Smith, 23—to protest mountaintop removal and the blasting of Coal River Mountain. Uprooted, they were immediately arrested by West Virginia State Troopers.

Forest Occupation in Catalonia

By DesdeBoscos.Blogspot.com

Since October 17, we have been occupying a piece of forest that was meant to host one of the hundreds of electrical towers that make up the High Voltage (MAT) power line, which will eventually interconnect France, Spain and perhaps, Africa. The place we now call our home is in an area called Quilleries (Girona, Spain), near Sant Feliu de Sacsam Village. It is about 3,000 feet high and surrounded by mountains in a fairly isolated environment.

The reasons for this occupation are many. We won’t accept without fighting, yet another gigantic infrastructure that will solve absolutely nothing and, in fact, will make things worse. We have to choose which side we’re on: either we stand for western civilization, or we fight against it. It’s time for action! This is an attempt to show that some people still have what it takes! Challenging the establishment is a condition for living in this world.

Some of the “problems” this MAT line, hopes to solve include securing electrical power for the tourist villages of Girona, supplying electricity for the TAV/AVE and avoiding electrical blackouts like the 2007 blackout in Barcelona, Spain.

“We’re not going to enter the debate arena in which one side shows an “independent” study that states how much this power line is needed and the other side comes with yet another study that shows the opposite. It’s obvious which side we’re with, but we state that it is imperative to actually fight this power line.

In the meantime, we’re trying to build the foundations of a new world starting right here and now: reconnecting with the Earth, living what our instincts tell us, hurting the empire and putting pressure on its fissures.

Here, from the forests that have always hid the rebels, maquis, conspirators and other rebellion’s people; an invisible and feel protected. They’ve sold us the idea of progress and science as a nostrum/panacea that will free humanity of its fears and will give us commodities we never dreamed of before—commodities that, on the other hand, we never get to catch, because progress has to create new gadgets every single minute. What we’re able to use is that progress requires us to totally useless people full of insecurities and passivity. Every moment we spend in this world, we lose knowledge about how life would be without all these commodities they sell to us.

The occupation has been successful so far in two mouths, a lot of structures have been built: many boils on the trees, a communal “chill” house in between three trees to read and plot, a communal kitchen, an information point, a “warehouse” to store materials and keep things dry and many resistance structures that will keep police busy for some days as they try to evict us.

Also very important has been the help and involvement of many people we didn’t know until some weeks ago. Local people from the nearby villages as well as people from Barcelona and other cities show up and help. Some people decide to stay for days, or even want to live with us and pass on are curious about what we’re doing.

One communication strategy has been to try to speak directly with people instead of letting mass-media portray us and manipulate us as they please. No work has been done with them. We have used our own means: texts, flyers, posters, face-to-face talking with people of the villages, social movements and our own blog. Mass-media is never impartial. That’s why we feel everyone should show up with no cameras or microphones. From the forest, a big hug to all people trying to get rid of this capitalist-industrialist system and struggling to create a world without any kind of domination.

very same pathetic formula of production and consumption. Capital seeks to debase everything sacred. We hold lives over laws and human relations over commodity relations.

“We recognize what appears to be an unending historical condition of forced removal here in the Southwestern so-called US. From the murdering of O’odham Peoples and stealing of their lands for the development of what is now known as the metropolitan Phoenix area, to the ongoing forced relocation of more than 14,000 Diné who have been uprooted for the extraction of natural resources just two hours north of here, we recognize that this is not a condition that we must accept, it is a system that will continue to attack us unless we act.”

“We Queremos Un Mundo” (We Want One World) “Sin Fronteras” (Without Borders)... Chants from both sides of the border at the 2007 No Borders Camp—Resistance Against the Global Police—February 2007.

An abundance of responses to the border have developed in recent years. Many have strived to break out of popular mundane thought patterns of looking toward political figureheads for the answers. North America is in radical need of a distance that seeks to challenge borders and colonization through the expansion of capitalism. Anti-olympic organizing in Vancouver, British Columbia, has become full-on volatile. From burning barricades on native land, to shattered windows in Santa Cruz, the message has become clear—the olympics are not welcome on stolen native land.

From November 7-11, 2007, the Mexican border was occupied as people established an autonomous zone for a No Borders Camp. Prior to the No Borders Camp, people in California and San Diego were organizing and sabotaging the efforts of the Minute Men (an armed, anti-immigrant group that patrols the border). Insurrectional actions have sprouted up throughout the US, threatening the security of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) detention facilities. Funders of detention centers have also become the target of sabotage. Open organizing against these racist prisons and capitalist institutions, such as Wells Fargo, has been a common employed tactic amongst Smash ICE groups of the Northwest US.

Across the Atlantic ocean, Europeans have established the no border network to facilitate their desires to confront the violence perpetrated by border in their area. Through their network, they’ve organized numerous No Border Camps. A No Borders Camp was held in Calais, France, from June 23-29 2009. In late August, No Border Activists held a No Borders Camp in Lesbos, Greece. Activists were able to communicate with prisoners of war that were involved in hunger strikes and provide peripheral support for those imprisoned. Toward the end of the camp, 10 activists occupied the roof of the prison. One day of camp was dedicated to instigating interactions. A group deployed a rubber boat and instigated interactions with the Coast Guard. They were met by attempts of the Coast Guard who attempted to capsize them. One boat was even harpooned by the Coast Guard. One can only imagine what’s on the wings of future European camps.

Many European detention centers have felt tidal waves of resistance from migrants rioting there. In February, migrants set fire to detention center in Lampedusa, Italy, in response to the threat of 107 Tunisian migrants being deported to Tunisia. In September, migrants rioted and set fires in a Greek prison yard for more than five hours.

“Borders are scratched across the hearts of men, by strangers with a calm, judicial pen, and when the borders bleed we watch with dread the lines of ink along the map turn red.” - John Mannes

The NOG bloc knew that at the end of the day, the tables had not only been turned but literally taken from the noses of any one attempting to keep border discussions within frames of the past. For radicals in Southern Arizona, the reality of the No World is a new eye-to-eye. If you are not directly affected by the border, someone you know is. Chances are you have done work with No More Deaths, and witnessed the violence of the border and tried to process the cruelty of constant deaths and deportations—a result from capital pressure on those migrating north. Further north on both O’odham and Diné land, the border and relaxations have an even more omnipresent effect on everyday life. On O’odham land, people are frequently harassed by border patrol. These confrontations often escalate into extreme forms of intimidation and violence for O’odham people. These actions are not only carried out by border patrol, but also homeland security. For years, Diné people have been relocated due to infrastructure projects. (Note, this doesn’t come close to delving into the continuous actions both the Diné and O’odham face due to colonization.)

The border is merely one point of contention in this debate. The omission of capital and the unceasing violence of infrastructure must be brought into the light within these debates. It is also evident that we must move past alone and into attack mode now! Pleading from stage one, the stagnant ways only leave us drooling. Developing approaches to support people in the struggle, defending our communities and land while attacking the perpetrators of these acts of violence is the next step. So step it up! Instead of dwelling in the past, we organize for the future.

We hold lives over laws and human relations over commodity relations.”
BY BLACK MESA INDIGENOUS SUPPORT

Although there's been a recent victory against the reopening of the Black Mesa Complex, the Kayenta mine is still operating! Elders on the front lines fighting the continued impacts of coal mining and forced relocation efforts are still requesting support. We are writing with a request for direct, on-land support on behalf of families of traditional resistance communities of Black Mesa, Arizona. One of the Big Mountain elder matriarchs, Blanche Wilson, the mother of Mae Tso, who hosted the 2008 caravan, passed away on January 17. Please hold her and her family in your thoughts and prayers. Mae and Samuel, two of Blanche's children, and elders themselves, are living alone at their homesteads. They are in need of support—they will need to take four days away from basic necessities and work for the traditional funeral. Additionally, Mae injured her back on Christmas day and has been in pain for the last three weeks and at a limited work capacity; Samuel has been working double what he normally does.

Furthermore, after this year's Caravan/Fall Wood Run to Black Mesa, Black Mesa Indigenous Support has received an unprecedented amount of direct requests for on-land support from elders—we usually have about 2-3 per month, and this month we have nine requests, besides Mae and Samuel Tso. There are several sheep herders on-land right now, but nearly all of them are leaving soon. February is a difficult month for the elders to live out in the vast canyonlands of Black Mesa in such high altitude in the cold and snow without paved roads and supporters are much appreciated. One of the elders is undergoing knee surgery at the end of January and will be out of commission for several weeks. If you contact us we will give you details.

It is extremely important that we try as hard as we can to have supporters up there to honor these requests and make sure that we continue our support beyond the caravan. If you have come on a caravan or spent time on the land before, please consider reconnecting with the struggle and staying with a family requesting support. If you can't come out, put the call out to your community and offer to talk to interested sheep herders about your experience before getting them in touch with us. This is vital to remain connected to the struggle and to show our solidarity. Please consider coming out if at all possible. Let us know, and let anyone else who could possibly come out know.

Many Thanks,
Black Mesa Indigenous Support Collective

Durwin White Lightning Passes Into the Spirit World.
Independent Investigation Underway, You Can Help!

BY NORTH COAST EARTH FIRST! FIRST!

Durwin White Lightning passed into the spirit world on December 9, 2009. Durwin hosted many native ceremonies, in the tradition of the Dakota people, all up and down the West Coast of the U.S. In 2005, he dedicated a Sun Dance ceremony to the preservation of the ancient redwoods and the people working to protect it. He said that things that people pray for in the Sun Dance can come true within four years, and the old growth on former PL land was saved by 2009.

The circumstances around Durwin's death are highly suspicious; he had just been on the West Coast doing a ceremony for his 52 birthday. He and a friend traveled to North Dakota by train, and his medical marijuana must have been detected, because there were officers waiting to arrest him, at the train station. He was then taken to jail and found hanged in his jail cell a few hours later, allegedly by suicide. Few believe that Durwin would ever commit suicide, and especially not over a pot ticket; he had his 215 medical marijuana license, so it may have been a court battle, yet certainly not something worth committing suicide over.

Many believe that foul play was involved, and an independent investigation is underway. Durwin's family is not wealthy, and is accepting help with legal fees. You should be able to go into any Wells Fargo bank and make a donation to the "Durwin White Lightning account." If you make a donation, or need more information, please contact us and let us know.

"Durwin was very supportive of Earth First! and Earth Firsters, dedicating a lot of prayers and ceremonies to the forest and the people putting their lives on the line for it. The reality of the risks being taken was not wasted on Durwin, he realized how much was being sacrificed to save the ancient ones, and did all he could to help, in his own good way.

"It's a time for us to fill our channupas and pray for the family and each other's health, happiness and help to deal with these trying times."
Michael Two-Feathers
In modern industrial America, the natural world is something apart from our everyday existence, an isolated pocket, museum-like, that one visits all too rarely. Returning home after the annual ten-day "wilderness experience," many of us do not wish we could live in a way that would integrate our daily lives more into the natural world. We live, essentially, communally.

Most of the indigenous peoples of the world, before their cultures were so heavily impacted by contact with European "civilization," governed their lands in a way that was strong to that which we term "naturally" or "wild." The concepts of parks or wilderness areas were foreign and unnecessary because they lived in harmony with their environment, and wild nature was a part of their daily existence. Native people no more needed National Parks than eagles need traffic control.

In parts of the Navajo and Hopi reservations in northern Arizona, native people still live in the old ways, where rocks, trees, springs, and animals are sacred, and the ties to the land are so strong that to leave the land is to vanish altogether. Medicine women like 82-year-old Irene Yazzie pray and offer yellow and white corn pollen for all living things, including vegetation, humans, four leggeds (animals), birds and insects.

Pressure from the US government and white society (the Mormon church, in particular) has caused the loss of much traditional homeland, creating poverty, overcrowding, overgrazing and other hardships. But the people remained tied to the land, still speaking their native tongues, and refusing to yield to harassment by the US government. The traditional Dine' (Navajo) and Hopi have never signed treaties with the US and remain sovereign nations. Their culture could teach us a great deal about living lightly on Earth and defending against those who would exploit it.

Public law 93-531 tells these people they have to leave. Also called the Navajo-Hopi Land Settlement Act, it was passed in 1974 and promoted by Arizona Senator Barry Goldwater and Representative Morris Udall. On the surface, the law deals with a supposed "land dispute" between Navajo and Hopi People, and pretends to form a just settlement in reality. It is simply an attempt to force the people to leave the land and open it up to massive and destructive miners exploitation. It will, if carried out, be one of the largest forced relocations in history, removing some 13,000 people from their ancestral homeland.

To begin to understand the situation, we must study the history of land grabbing in the Four Corners area, and the imposition of tribal councils on the people. Political benefactors and private landowners have always been foreign concepts to the Navajo and Hopi tribes. The Hopi maintained permanent villages on the mesas with small farms near rivers, and traveled with their flocks between summer and winter homes. Any conflicts that may have existed between them were settled peacefully. Trading and intermarriage were common.

In 1892, the US government drew a rectangle on a map one degree long and one degree wide, and called it the Hopi reservation. The reservation boundaries did not consider traditional land use or topography, and excluded the original Hopi homeland and the farming villages of Moencopi. Evidence exists that the Hopi reservation was created to pacify and "civilize" the white people who were helping the Hopi resisting kidnapping of their children by Mormons and the US government for "education." In any case, the reservation was clearly established to give the US legal power over the Hopi and their land.

As federal troops arrived and traditional leaders were arrested, a split occurred among the Hopi. A few wanted an agreement with the white, while most made no concessions. Originally called "friends" and "hostiles," the two groups today are called "progressives" and "traditionalists." The wealthiest and most powerful Hopi family today are decendants of Emory Sekaquaptewa, who was kidnapped as a child and "Mormonized."

In the 1930's, President Roosevelt's commissioner of Indian Affairs, John Collier, chose Oliver La Farge to persuade the Hopi to adopt a constitution and establish a tribal council. Although voting was alien to the Hopi—their Kikmongwi (spiritual leaders) used a type of consensus decision making—and they showed little interest in forming a council, a hopi beaver was held and the constitution and tribal council was established. This imposed form of government completely ignored the role of spiritual guidance in Hopi culture and was boycotted by more than 80 percent of the people. Never recognized by the traditionalists, the council was largely dormant until 1948 when the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) attempted to revive it to sign oil and gas leases. At that time Hopi religious leaders wrote to President Truman proclaiming their sovereignty and refusing to lease their sacred soil. Protests have continued until this day and are certain to continue in the future.

In 1970, the Hopis wrote to President Nixon, "The white man, through his insensitivity to the necessity to change the face of the Mother Earth. The white man's advanced technological capacity has occurred as a result of his lack of regard for the spiritual path and for the way of all living things. The white man's desire for material possessions and power has blinded him to the pain he has caused Mother Earth by his quest for what she calls natural resources...The path of the Great Spirit has become difficult to see by almost all people, even by many Indians who have chosen instead to follow the path of the white man."

In spite of such protests, the BIA reorganized the tribal council with pro-development "progressives" who signed leases with mineral leases with Peabody Coal Company.

The history of the Navajo tribal council is similar. In 1921, Standard Oil discovered oil on Navajo land and proposed a lease deal. Seventy-five Navajo elders unanimously rejected the deal, so the BIA created a "tribal council." When three men were persuaded to sign a lease they were made the tribal council.

The tribal councils of the Navajo and Hopi have continued to this day as puppet organizations maintained and funded by the BIA for the principal purpose of signing mineral leases with energy companies. The creation of the reservation system removed a majority of the people, but the US government has shown no interest in listening to traditional leaders.

The reservation system imposed on the Navajo and Hopi people included a large shared section of land known as the Joint Use Area (JUA). It was in the JUA, on Black Mesa, that the first coal was discovered, over 100 years ago, in 1877.

In 1964, John Boyden, former archbishop of the Roman Catholic Church, and a Navajo, called for the resignation of the JUA's management. He organized the Navajo Council of Churches and 27 Navajo leaders participated in a 12-day prayer vigil to call for a moratorium on coal production.

Joint Use Area and other Four Corners lands a "Navajo-Sacred Area."

The wealth from mineral exploitation goes to people like John Boyden, who received a million dollars from the Hopi tribal council alone. The tribes are paid only a few cents per ton for their coal, and many traditional people living near the mines suffer the environmental consequences but don’t have electricity themselves. The electricity is consumed by the sprawling neon cities of southern Arizona and southern California.

People are being paid only energy company able to get mineral leases in the JUA. Neither tribal council alone was legally allowed to lease it. This created years of legal hassles for the RIA and energy companies. John Boyden began in the 1950s to find a way to get around this obstacle, and essentially created the Navajo-Hopi "land dispute." Boyden also filed a land claim, supposedly on behalf of the Hopi, which resulted in a loss of millions of acres for very little money. Both the traditionalists and progressive have, to this day, refused to touch this money, saying that their homeland can never be sold.

In 1974, Boyden lobbied in Washington, DC, for a bill to divide the JUA and proceed with mineral leasing. At the same time, Evans and Associates, a Salt Lake City public relations firm, fabricated a range war on the reservation and wrote speeches for hopi tribal councilmen about the "land dispute." Evans and Associates also represented WEST, a consortium of 23 utility companies with interest in Southwest power plants. All the sneaky activities of Boyden and his accomplices paid off: Congress passed PL-93-351, which split the JUA in half and ordered a barbed wire fence constructed to separate the Navajo and Hopi. It also mandated a 90 percent reduction in livestock, which for many traditionalists was their only livelihood. This stock reduction was supposedly to protect Hopi lands from overgrazing, but where else in the West has the US government shown any concern about overgrazing?

So now we also place new construction or building improvement on property within the JUA. Residents can actually be arrested for simply patching a hole in their roof. The traditional people have no recourse, because all lawsuits have to go through the tribal councils. Morris Udall recently admitted that the stock reduction and construction freeze were instituted to "persuade" the Navajos to leave their land.

As fencing proceeded, about 100 Hopis and 10,000 Navajos were told (by the Relocation Commission established by the Act) they had to move. The traditional Navajo refused, saying that the land was their sacred homeland. In Navajo language, the closest word for relocation means to vanish altogether. In 1979, they sent a letter to the US government saying, "The Dine' Nation of Big Mountain wishes to inform the various Federal agencies that the sacred laws of the Dine' give no authority for the Federal Government and its related agencies to intrude and disrupt the sacred lands of Big Mountain. We demand that the Federal Government remove all Government and its related agencies to intrude and disrupt the sacred lands of Big Mountain by November 16, 1979. Any equipment left on or that is in the Big Mountain area is subject to confiscation by the Independent Dine' Nation."

The Navajos also stated, "We further declare our right to live in peace and harmony with our Moqui (Hopi) neighbors, and cooperation between us will remain unchanged."

The RIA's attempt to enforce livestock reduction has met massive resistance, as have their attempts to complete the last five miles of fence. Even 80 and 90 year old women and men have been arrested while defending their homeland. The Relocation Commission's job is to force or coerce the Dine' to leave their lands. The few who have done so have found life exceedingly difficult in racist border towns. Many are swindled out of the housing promised to them, and are prohibited from returning to their homelands. This results in high rates of alcoholism and suicide. The Relocation Commission is currently the object of Congressional investigation for engaging in fraudulent dealings with relocatees. More than one commissioner has resigned in disgust at the unworkability of the Act, and its severe impacts on the people. PL 88-269 requires all those who refuse to move to be forcibly removed by July 1986. This will prove to be a difficult task for the government. In the words of 62 year old Ruth Benally, "We won't stop (resisting). I've lived here all my life. Big Mountain is sacred to us. It is where we collect our herbs and medicines [. . .] When the time comes, if we don't have any other choice, we are going to use our fists. No matter how small I am, I'll fight all the way to the end." Pauline Whiting describes the situation: "I will never leave this land. If they come to move me, they can shoot me right here."

A military solution to the government's problems enforcing relocation is a very real possibility, recalling the events at Wounded Knee in 1973. President Reagan's personal emissaries to solve the "dispute," William Clark (Secretary of Interior) and Richard Morris, have stated that those refusing to leave would be declared as trespassers [. . .] the eviction could be enforced by US Marshals and the US military."

We won't stop (resisting). When the time comes, if we don't have any other choice, we are going to use our fists. No matter how small I am, I'll fight all the way to the end."

The Coming Uranium Boom

BY COBO

Washington, D.C.

I remember a feeling of foreboding and a sense of coming doom as I entered the Uranium Expo held in Grand Junction Colorado almost five years ago. My name was a false name and said that I was an investor. Throughout the expo there were companies with slick booths and glossy literature. Many of the companies had recently formed and were selling mining rights and uranium stocks throughout the American South West. The companies touted the riches that were sure to come as uranium prices continued to rise.

With the uranium mining boom that many speculated would be coming hadn’t quite materialized itself, they continue to pump, from 2004 until today, many mines have opened and closed as the price of uranium fluctuates between $40.00 and $140.00 per pound. Mines have traded hands. Many have been readied to go into production, but never went into production for higher prices and, more importantly, a mill to process the ore.

Colorado was the only uranium mill in operation in the entire United States. The mill is owned and run by Denison Mining Corporation and is just outside of the small town of Blanding, Utah. The mill has been running at a limited capacity. Until recent decades, this part of the country was polluted with nuclear waste from the US and Canada. But at the end of December, Denison Mines started pulling ore out of its Arizona I mine just north of the Grand Canyon. This is the first uranium mining activity in Arizona in more than 20 years. The company plans on reopening as many as 10 additional mines in the Arizona Strip geological formation—all near the north rim of the Grand Canyon. The Denison Mining mill currently has a monopoly on U.S. produced yellow-cake uranium ore, and is not eager to make another company’s ore.

This bottleneck in the supply chain has kept the full effect of the Third Uranium Boom at a minimal. However, if the mining corporations have their way, this bottleneck will be eliminated and the boom will be on in full-force. Opposition to the “Nuclear Renaissance” (see January-February 2012) seeks to take place at the source to keep the ore in the ground, because every step, from mining to milling to refining to reactors to storing waste, is toxic to all living things.

Energy Fuels Inc., a Canadian company, is leading the charge with their proposed Pitoon Ridge Mill in a little-known but amazingly beautiful area of Paradox Valley, Colorado. The mill is well on its way to being permitted to break ground. If this happens, inactive uranium mines in Colorado, Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico will start pulling the toxic ore out of the ground for the first time in decades. “If the proposed mill in Paradox Valley is approved and constructed, the Division anticipates a surge of mine permitting and exploration activities,” states a Colorado Division of Minerals and Safety report on uranium mining.

Energy Fuels owns at least 40 uranium mines that would jump into production. The proposed mill is claiming that new technology and environmental requirements would make this mill environmentally sound, but every other uranium mill that has ever gone into production ended up as an Environmental Protection Agency Superfund site. To make things even more problematic for the mill is to be situated on top of not one, but two active faults that have had more than 4,000 recorded seismic events since 1991, according to documents filed by Energy Fuels with the state.

Five years ago, when I infiltrated a test drill to the biggest player in uranium in the southwest was Cotter Corporation, a subsidiary of General Atomic. At that time, Cotter had four mines in operation in Western Colorado and a mill in King City, Colorado. Due to fluctuations in the price of uranium and pressure in the form of lawsuits from environmental groups, the mill ceased operations in 2006. Between the years of 1999-2006, Cotter was facing a conflict of interest between environmental and toxic waste violations, and the mill had been listed as a Superfund site for over 22 years and is in no clean-up taking place. Cotter announced last year plans for a $200 million dollar re-

Considering the breadth and effectiveness of the Green Scare here in the states a Surprising Wolf goes to a British Court, which found that was justified for six Greenpeace activists to deface property in order to prevent the much greater damage that will result from rampant carbon emissions and global warming. The activists were nabbed while they were painting a chimney at the Kingsnorth coal fired power plant. The activists were painting a message to Prime Minister Gordon Brown to phase out the plant and to not replace it with a new one.

One of the witty wits called in defense of the Greenpeace activists, James Hansen is the recipient of a Direct Action Wolf for his vocal and physical activism to deface property in order to prevent the much greater damage that will result from rampant carbon emissions and global warming. Hansen, a NASA climate expert, openly called for an end to the current industrial civilization in Copenhagen. “This is analogous to the issue of slavery...on those kind of issues you cannot compromise. You cannot say let’s reduce slavery, let’s find a compromise and reduce it 50 percent or reduce it 40 percent.” In an interview with the Guardian Hansen said that “the democratic process doesn’t quite seem to work.” And that direct action is the only way to tackle climate change. Not just a talker like Al Gore (who should get a mention), Hansen was arrested on June 23rd protesting Mountain Top Removal in West Virginia.

The Earth First! Journal was recently able to catch up with radical filmmaker Franklin Lopez about his current film project End:Civ. We took the opportunity to ask him a few questions about the film, Derrick Jensen, and the idea of End:Civ.

EFJ: What inspired you to start making the movie End:Civ?

FL: When I was working for Democracy Now! I went to a peak oil conference in New York City to see if there was a story there. That’s where I heard Derrick Jensen speak for the first time, and I was blown away. All the other speakers did presentations about solar panels, or sustainable living, all things that interest me; but Derrick’s talk was brutally honest, funny, heartbreaking and inspiring. It took me a few days to feel for some time, but could not find the words to say. After the talk, I made a b-line to the table where he was signing books; and I told him we needed to bring his ideas to the screen.

EFJ: Can you give a brief rundown of the film?

FL: END:CIV is mostly based on the premises Derrick put forth in his Endgame books. In the premises, Derrick breaks down the major ideas of his books up front. For instance, the first premise is, “Civilization is not and never will be sustainable.” I use the tar sands project in northern Alberta to hit people over the head. Yes, we are making mud into oil; we are destroying millions of acres of boreal forest, polluting pristine rivers so that we can drive to the mall. Our culture is insane.

EFJ: When did you start making this film, and when do we expect to see the final product?

FL: I officially started making END:CIV in January 2009, but filming began in 2007. I brought Derrick to Vancouver and filmed him in front of a green screen so that I could place him in front of all types of backdrops, while he explained his ideas. My plan was to complete the film in February, but it’s looking more like May of this year.

EFJ: How are you going to distribute the film?

FL: I plan on touring heavily when END:CIV is completed. Hopefully, I will hit most of North America and maybe Europe. I also plan on having a streaming version online. A few distributors have shown interest in putting out the DVD, which is encouraging.

EFJ: What is the end of civilization scaring the hell out of a lot of people, but others are cheering its desirability? Why is the end of civilization a good thing?

FL: Derrick Jensen wrote about a thousand pages to explain this, but I’ll try in a few sentences. We only have one planet. This is civilization: this is the only strip of dirt we get. Civilization is destroying our home through the hyper-exploitation of finite resources. If we want to have a place to live and have a home for who’s coming after us, we need to stop this murderous machine. Time is running out, the end is near. How’s that?

EFJ: How are you going to distribute the film? Do you have anything else you’d like to say about your film?

FL: Derrick is an amazingly busy person who cranks out books faster than I can read them. With that said, he has always been supportive of my visual treatment of his ideas, and has been very responsive to my requests. In short, it’s been a pleasure working with him and getting to know him over the years. If I were a nationalist, I would say Derrick is a national treasure.

EFJ: Thank you.

WHEN YOU COME TO A RIVER BRIDGE

Stop. Leave your machine. Spend an hour in the shade of willows and cottonwoods, walking barefoot in cool mud, letting holly leaves stick tiny holes of pain in your feet, and loving the river—for it is so much older than you.

But if you cannot stop, then do this:

Take your foot off the gas and push it in neutral so let it coast. Turn off the radio and take off your hat. Place your head out the window and breathe the river air and know eternity.

But hear the river as you drive away:

"Running, running Out of time. Eternity, eternity, No longer runs With me."

And never turn off the river song.

MOTHER EARTH, HER WITNESS

East of the sporting goods store: a once-neglected patch of shortgrass prairie. Powerlines crackle on humid mornings, people pass on the bicycle trail.

Year after year, corners of Conifer and Redwood, the prairie dogs have raised their pups in the neighborhood. They take walks and squawk and bark, groom each other, stretch and graze, keep watch for hawks and foxes. Tunnel their underground homes, pile up the dirt, run across the street. A busy life. So much to do.

Sometimes I see them standing upright to observe the close of day, the purpling of Rocky Mountains in shadow, the wind in the cottonwoods and grass.

The smog, the traffic, the FOR SALE sign on the lot in spring—such things as I haven't the heart to witness myself—they too observe.

Past few weeks, I've been biking into town using alternate streets. I cannot bear to see what's happening, but today I—somehow—forgot.

East, then south on Redwood, old habit. Realigning my error, I brace for the worst: mounds of fill dirt, a leveled field, alien trespass of gigantic white dump trucks, prairie dogs dead on the road. Already

I resent the humans who will someday occupy the as-yet unbuilt houses, whose true costs they'll never know. I blame the developers.

especially this morning: I see a prairie dog standing on the curb, her back to the street, watching the dumped dirt fall from a truck with a rattle and earth-shaking thump; brave by far than I, she faces the terror head-on—upright and full of grace.

Ah, if I were a man I know who I'd be: The itinerant botanist Hopping freights And studying plant geography What a story, what a trail I would see.

INTO THE WILD

A dragonfly keeps running its head into the glass instead of flying around the window When I try to steer it with my cane to the left & freedom It just gets more agitated But when I hold the cane still it lands on the tip for a rest & gets a short ride out the entrance Once the dragonfly senses it's outside it instantly departs into the wild

Later as our path turns left along the ocean front we see a dog charging us from the picnic table area Only it's not barking because it's not a dog but a wide-eyed raccoon & it isn't charging us but being pursued by nine aroused & raucous crows The raccoon wastes no time running into the brushy patch below the sewer treatment plant disappearing completely into the wild

Two crows land on the very bush where the raccoon was last seen The rest settle in various trees Failing speechless they wait with amazing patience Fifteen minutes go by & then thirty but that cunning raccoon is not about to break into the open yet & the crows can't wait forever Still in silence they fly away together into the wild

ARMS AMONG VISIONS

Clear as cut glass & just as dangerous

DANCING THE FANDANGO

Driving through Tulsa, the sun shone through a breach in the clouds illuminating tract houses on a hillside rowed like tombstones in a graveyard empty of the living.

Inside people are hypnotically glued to computer monitors to travel the information highway that leads into the cloud of unknowing.

Who lives in these houses? Are they the fearful people we have become? People ensconced in homes with electronic barricades of sight and sound that keep life at bay.

Nature clamors at the gate trying to breach our barricades. We respond by treating her like a hungry vagabond as we insist we stepped out of nature long ago and no longer need her.

Nature is an abstract concept, more a video presence than a real entity, that is never known by touch or smell.

A future awaits of diminished lives in a diminished world with diminished possibilities. We can still wear shoes with corporate logos as signatures of our freedom of choice.

We dance the fandango in the twilight of freedom unaware that this may be our last dance. We clack the castanets loudest as we come closest to the end.

Earth First! Seasonal Calendar

Issue Explanation

Eostar: Festival of Achievement

Nature is catalyzing the regeneration of its seeds—all those that have been dormant during the cold, dark winter. Birds are migrating and preparing fresh nests, this is the time of Eostar—the primal force of life renewing. Around March, those of us in the northern hemisphere can take time to embrace the Spring Equinox (our friends in the south will be enjoying their Fall Equinox), when day and night are equal—a time to reflect on light and dark, our achievements and failures, and understand what can be learned from them.

This Eostar season, aid the powers of renewal and draw strength from them. One way to do this is to get together with passionate people in your community to celebrate the achievements that have worked from your organizing and actions. These conversations can easily lead to brainstorming about goals you want to set for the rest of the year. There are many day-to-day projects that can be initiated to build needed connections within your community. Gardens—be they public or guerrilla projects—can strengthen the soil, successful actions.

During the coming of Spring, we sometimes see "hares dash through the fields at night on mysterious errands," as Starhawk notes. Taking inspiration from our fast-running furry friends, let us seize the night and take advantage of what can be accomplished while others are sleeping. Carpe Noctem!

Editor's Note: We originally included the Earth First! Seasonal Calendar last issue, this reprint includes a few corrections. Please send your words of wisdom to add to our seasonal calendar!
Prisoners in the Struggle: Support Them!

The following list is a small sample of the total number of political prisoners and prisoner support groups worldwide. Regulations for mail sent to prisoners vary according to individual prisons. RNC8 Defendant Denied Justice

Judge Teresa Warner denied RNC8 defendant Max Speckter's motion to suppress evidence that was obtained through an illegal search of his van. With guns drawn, police surrounded the van that Max and friends had just climbed into on the morning of September 11 on the grounds of a "probable cause pickup and hold" warrant. Claiming that objects potentially used for prostitution could be seen within the van, police drove it to a police station and searched it without any outside observers. The motion to suppress was denied because, according to Judge Warner, "public safety outweighs the van's occupants' right to be free of unreasonable searches and seizures." The trial date for the RNC8 has been set for October 25, 2010.

Steve Murphy's Court Documents Filed

Steve Murphy pled guilty to one count of conspiracy to commit arson, which along with the "Terrorism Enhancement" carries a 5 year prison sentence. Although the court documents mention an undicted co-conspirator, there is no reason to believe that Steve has cooperated or is cooperating with the feds. He needs your support, so please write.

Hugh and Tiga's First Day in Court

In a courtroom packed with supporters, Hugh and Tiga sat through their first court hearing. Confronting a totally inept performance by the prosecutor, who likened the defense attorneys "coordinated office murder" to the defense attorneys mounted powerful arguments for a motion to dismiss the felony racketeering charges. Decrying the notion that someone to ridicule and contempt qualifies as intimidation and therefore falls under RICO statues of felonious conspiracy, Tiga's lawyer declared, "Jay Leno and Conan O'Brien do this every night! Why aren't they being charged under RICO?" He added that "This isn't a Build-A-Bear Workshop! You can't just take a bunch of crap, throw it all together, and call it a felony!"

Please Help Marie Mason Get Vegan Meals

Since Marie was initially admitted to prison more than a year ago, she has been denied her right to proper vegan meals. Marie's support crew recently received a phone call from Marie during which she asked that friends and supporters write the warden at the Federal Correction Institution, Wayoma, Minnesota, and politely request she be given consistent and nutritionally adequate meals. Hopefully, with the help of outside support, the new Warden will be more understanding of her situation than his previous counterpart. For a sample letter you can go to either of Marie’s support sites: WWW.PREMARIE.ORG or WWW.SUPPORTMARIEMASON.ORG. Her birthday was also on January 26, and we are sure that any late cards or kind words would greatly be appreciated.

The anarchists wanted to build a broad-based and diverse movement, but there was no room for anyone who did not conform to their rigid set of principals and worldview. The food was vegan, music hip-hop, and clothes black. Tattoos and piercing were required. Nice clothes were deemed suspicious. It was hard to see how anyone could expect a broad-based, diverse movement to develop along such strict lines.

While this criticism may be a bit general, it poses some critical topics that continue to define the EF movement. In reading Roselle’s book, older EFers will find this book a chronicle of their struggles, and the younger EFers will be able to better understand the movement’s history. Love ‘em or hate ‘em, the ‘Rednecks forWilderness’ are our forerunners.

We can learn much from them.

US Government Admits to Illegal Killing of Macho B

A new stunning development has come about in the already shocking case of the mistreatment of the jaguar. Months after the last known remaining jaguar in the US, Macho B, was killed by the US Fish and Wildlife Service—the US Department of the Interior issued a statement saying that it was not the fault of the Fish and Wildlife Service for mishandling the endangered species. In their report, the Department of the Interior cited the carelessness of the handlers to use illegally injected drugs as the main cause of Macho B’s death. In turn, the Fish and Wildlife Service has decided that it will finally pursue a recovery plan to set aside critical habitat for jaguars.

Guerrilla Art and March Mark the Anniversary of Slave Activists in Russia

Masked wheat pastes went under the cover of night on January 20, pushing up a 50-foot-wide mural onto a wall in St. Petersburg, Russia, to commemorate the assassination of anarchist journalist, Anastasia Baburina, and radical lawyer, Stepan Markelov a year ago (SFSF Internet 2009). Both Baburina and Markelov had been involved in environmentalist causes, and Markelov had represented demonstrators in the Russian equivalent of the Green Scare. A little less than one hundred demonstrators marched through the streets of Moscow in honor of the slain activists. Fifty people were arrested.

March Against Extension for Vermont Yankee Nuclear Plant

The Vermont Yankee nuclear plant in Vernon, Vermont, has a history riddled with malpractice, from leakage of radioactive material to a cooling tower wall collapse to a transformer fire. Now, its operator, Entergy, seeks a 20-year extension to its already 40-year operating license. In early January, a 126-mile walk from Brattleboro to Montpelier ensued, consisting of some 1,200 demonstrators attempting to draw attention to Vermont Yankee’s disgraceful past.

is putting the finishing touches on its newest graphic.

THE TRUE COST OF COAL

You can help us raise the funds and support we need to print thousands of copies of this graphic and accompanying educational materials!

Book Us at Your School: On tour with giant, portable murals, the Bees use art as a tool for popular analysis, education and organizing. We offer high energy, interactive, graphic-based picture-lectures that speak to the complex struggles around energy and resource extraction, as well as the small-scale actions we can take to build another world.

Collaborate with Us on Our Print Run: order bulk posters at just above cost for your organization or school, or prepay for your own copy hot off the press!

I spent a year in the Northwoods of Wisconsin at an outdoor school. It was not a survival school, because I died. I died to my old way of thinking. I died to being egocentric. I died to the pursuit of the civilized lifeway. I became alive to many other things—became alive to the Circle, I became alive to the native lifeway. I became alive to the interconnectedness of all things. I became alive to trusting, being and the now. My heart is full. I have much to share, more than words can say.
